Reds Massing Troops to Meet U. N. Offensive

Enemy Resistance Stiffens in Most Of Northwest Area; 25th's Push Slowed

TOKYO (Sunday), Nov. 26 (AP).—Rallying Red forces fought back in northwest Korea today and rushed reinforcements up for what may be the showdown battles with 110,000 surging United Nations troops.

The Communist counterattack crimped a rush by the U. S. Twenty-fifth Division on the Unsan sector of the general northwestern Allied offensive that jumped off Friday, aiming to end the war quickly.

Enemy resistance stiffened everywhere in the northwest except at the left end of the line, where the U. S. Twenty-fourth Division had driven 2 miles north of Chongju without a fight by Saturday noon.

Tough Going Near Taechon

The crucial northwest front overshadowed the snowy northeast sector where South Koreans rolled unopposed into the big coastal city of Chongjin. It was the last known big barrier between the South Koreans and the Soviet Siberian border, 55 air miles ahead.

Subzero temperatures and mountains were proving the biggest obstacles in the northeast, where one American unit already has reached the Manchurian frontier.

But the estimated 100,000 Chinese and Korean Reds in the northwest showed fight against a U. N. offensive which General MacArthur himself said was intended to get the Americans home by Christmas.

Near Taechon, the South Korean First Division, operating on the Twenty-fourth's right flank, found tough going. Red counterattacks hurled back the South Koreans a mile and a half early Saturday. Then the South Koreans recoiled, advanced 3 miles, and were reported close to Taechon Sunday. Their patrols entered the city's outskirts last night.

Big Battle Likely Soon

On the right flank of the South Koreans, the United States Twenty-fifth Division sent a task force 5 miles east of Unsan. At 2:45 a. m. Sunday, the Reds opened a strong new counter-attack. The task force was reported still under assault but holding firm.

A field dispatch said a big battle soon may be joined in the northwest.

Air observers said they had spotted an estimated 5000 Reds swarming over hills and fields toward Allied forces advancing on the west 50 miles or less from the Manchurian frontier.

Yet another 8000 were reported

Freed Yanks Tell of Red 'Selling Job'

U. S. EIGHTH ARMY, Korea, Nov. 25 (AP).—Released American prisoners of war said today they believed their Chinese Communist captors tried to make a "fifth column" out of them.

The prisoners first were given Red indoctrination lectures which assailed American political and military leaders.

Of the first 27 wounded Americans to be freed, 19 said Chinese told them:

"If you are forced to fight again, tell your friends to fire into the air. Then give up."

A summary of the statements of the liberated men was released by the Eighth Army. The prisoners were freed near American lines Tuesday.

Chinese Communist interrogators who questioned the prisoners before setting them free told the Americans that Chinese troops in Korea were "volunteers."

That has been a major point in Chinese Red propaganda broadcasts, but has not been borne out by prisoners captured by United Nations forces.

The interrogator also said the Chinese Communists did not like

Chinese Reds Brought Near Talks on Korea

U. N. Monday Session Links Formosa Issue; Storm Blocks Meeting

LAKE SUCCESS, Nov. 25 (NYHT).—An initial move to bring the Chinese Communists into talks about the Korean conflict as well as the Formosa situation appeared to have met some success today, after Yugoslavia's Dr. Ales Bebler, November president of the Security Council, bracketed the two problems for a council meeting.

Although a Security Council session scheduled for today was postponed until Monday at 3 p.m. because of the violent storm raging over the metropolitan area, Dr. Bebler conferred for about an hour here with Gen. Wu Hsiu-chuan and other Chinese Red delegates, together with Secretary General Trygve Lie. Afterwards, he said his proposal for a joint Formosa-Korea discussion "seems not to meet objection—to now."

Dr. Bebler's proposal called for listing in the Security Council's agenda as a joint item—"(A) complaint of armed invasion of Taiwan (Formosa), (B) complaint of aggression against the Republic of Korea." The first part refers to the Chinese Communists' charges of American intervention in Chinese internal affairs in protecting the Chinese Nationalist stronghold on Formosa.

Earlier, Chinese Communist Foreign Minister Chou En-lai on November 11 had rejected a separate Security Council invitation to take part in Council discussions of Gen. Douglas MacArthur's special report charging elements of seven Red divisions had entered the Korean fighting.

The Reds had then said they would be willing to discuss American "intervention" in Korea and "aggression" against Chin. jointly and Dr. Bebler's formula may get over the procedural hurdle.

Meantime, American Ambassador Ernest A. Gross told reporters the United States favored the Plastic Surgery Experts Called To Repair Sphinx

CAIRO, Egypt, Nov. 25 (U.P.).—The Sphinx, Egypt's most famous symbol, was disclosed today to be suffering from old age and experts have been summoned to perform a massive job of plastic surgery.

For 5000 years the Sphinx has peered inscrutably over the desert but at last the cold, damp northerly winds from the Mediterranean have begun to eat into its fabric. Stone and cement have crumbled from its left foreleg.

This is not the first time repairs have been made to the Sphinx, but it is the first of any importance since before the birth of Christ. King Thutmoses IV, ruler of the eighteenth Dynasty, ordered some work done 3250 years ago and King Ramesses II of the nineteenth Dynasty also patched up parts 2900 years ago.

New Tests Face Draft 'Flunkers'

Deliberate Failures On Mental Checks Seen; Vulnerable Men to Be Inducted

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

A review of the cases of all selectees in this region rejected for Army service because they failed to pass the pre-induction mental qualification test has been ordered by military authorities, it was learned yesterday.

Reexamination of the case records is being undertaken particularly to catch up with those July and September selectees suspected of deliberately flunking the Armed Forces qualification test, which measures both literacy and capacity to learn.

A spokesman for the Baltimore district of Army recruitment—which includes Washington, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and West Virginia—said that induction offices within the region have been given oral instructions to cooperate with the local draft boards in reconsidering the "flunkees" for immediate induction into the Army.

Local Boards To Check

The arrangements call for the local boards to reexamine the files of the selectees who failed the mental qualification test, and determine, on the basis of each individual's background, schooling, and job history, whether or not he should have passed the exam. Those determined in the affirmative will be recommended for induction.

However, it will be up to the commanding officers of the induction stations to make the final determination on acceptability of the selectee.

Reexamination of the rejected selectees is provided by Army regulations. The present review has been initiated primarily through the efforts of Col. Asher W. Harman, Virginia director of Selective Service. Since the outbreak of the Korean war and the renewed activity of the draft, Harman has publicly protested against what he believes to be an abnormally high rate of rejections due to failure to pass the mental qualification test.

In July and August, according to Colonel Harman, 70 percent of the rejections among Virginia selectees were attributable to flunking the mental exam. He said yesterday he plans to issue a circular of instruction to all the local boards in the Commonwealth to begin at once reviewing the mental qualification rejection cases.

Nationally, the rejection rate for selectees failing to pass the mental qualification test has been running between 15 and 17.6 percent. Army personnel officials feel this rate is reasonable, but Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service, and many of the State draft directors believe the rate is far too high, and feel that there may be a great deal of deliberate flunking on the part of selectees.

Ethridge Resigns As Chairman of Advisory Board

The White House announced yesterday that Mark Ethridge, publisher of the Louisville Courier Journal, has resigned as chairman of the United States Advisory Commission on Information.

The resignation is effective December 15. Ethridge quit for "considerations of health."

In a letter to the newspaperman, President Truman said the advisory commission "has been of outstanding service" in placing the State Department's foreign information programs "upon a firm foundation."

"The contribution which you have made to the development of the information program has been very great and of lasting value," Mr. Truman said. "I want you to know that I deeply appreciate all you have done."

Flood Waters Add To Devastation As Coast Staggers Under Chill Blast

By The Associated Press

November's weather exploded with hurricane winds, marathon snow storms and bitter cold yesterday that caused at least 90 deaths.

Large areas reeled under their worst weather-whipping in years.

Smothering snow paralyzed entire industrial centers in Ohio and western Pennsylvania with a forecast of no early letup. The Eastern Seaboard was pounded for more than 12 hours by hurricane force winds. Damage ran into the millions.

Bitter cold and blustery snow spread deep into the South.

The deaths came from a variety of causes attributed directly and indirectly to the weather. This is the breakdown by States:

Pennsylvania 13, New Jersey 20, Michigan 12, Ohio 8, New York 7, Kentucky 6, Illinois 3, Maryland 2, South Carolina 2, Connecticut 2, and West Virginia 2, Alabama 5, Georgia 2.

Winds Reach 108 M. P. H.

The Eastern Seaboard storm, with winds ranging up to 108 miles an hour, raged from 5:30 a. m. to 6:30 p. m. before tapering off. The Weather Bureau said Saturday night that its full force was spent.

But not the raging snowstorm in the Appalachian area. No letup was forecast there until today.

The storm along the Eastern seaboard was the worst since the 1938 hurricane. The winds tore a path of destruction from Virginia to New England.

A huge wind-propelled tide smashed beach homes a mile inland on New York's Staten Island. More than 1000 families were evacuated from flooded East Coast shore areas.

The worst blizzard in 37 years dumped a paralyzing blanket of snow over the important Ohio industrial centers of Cleveland, Youngstown, Akron and Canton.

Pittsburgh Smothered

Pittsburgh was smothered under the heaviest continued snowfall in its history. Snow piled up to depth of 22 inches and more was in prospect. The United States Steel Corp. began closing its big plants employing more than 50,000. A spokesman said the situation was "very serious" and might cause heavy damage. Because of the snow, workers and materials couldn't be moved to and from the plants.

The same storm dumped as much as 30 inches of snow on parts of West Virginia.

There was more to come. The Washington Weather Bureau issued a special bulletin at 6 p. m. that from six inches to a foot more snow would fall in the snowbound area last night and today.

It forecast heavy snow with strong winds and severe drifting in Ohio, western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, extreme western Maryland and northeastern Kentucky.

The Bureau said snow would accumulate two to three feet in eastern Ohio, western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and extreme western Maryland.

Drifts 25 Feet Deep

Ohio State Police reported snow already had drifted as high as 25 feet in some places in the Steubenville, Ohio, area.

It was the same story in all

Pepco Plant Blast Darkens County Area

Bethesda-Gaithersburg Section Is Hit; Power Restored by Nightfall

A severe explosion ripped through the second floor of a power substation in Bethesda early yesterday, leaving thousands of homes in the area without electricity.

The blast, which occurred at 5:28 a. m. during the height of an electrical storm, scattered brick, concrete and steel into the substation yard and showered glass fragments as far as 200 feet away. No one was injured.

Thousands of homes in Rockville, Gaithersburg and Norbeck, served entirely by the substation, and in parts of Bethesda and Chevy Chase were blacked out.

The explosion tore out the thick brick wall on the second floor of the $500,000 Potomac Electric Power Co. building, at Georgetown rd. and Del Ray ave. Equipment was badly damaged.

Worst In 15 Years

Officials said they could not estimate the extent of damage, but described the blast, which followed a short circuit flash, as "the most serious and extensive we have experienced in 15 years."

By noon, electricity had been restored to the Bethesda and Chevy Chase areas. Emergency crews, handicapped by swirling snow and driving sleet, worked steadily throughout the day to

Temperatures dropped about 40 degrees yesterday as snow and frigid weather gripped Greater Washington.

The Weather Bureau predicted the thermometer would read 15 degrees by early morning. The forecast called for a two-to-three-snowfall.

It was a day of floods, washouts and accidents:

The Anacostia last night overflowed its east bank and spilled onto the Fairlawn side of the river.

The Peace Cross at Bladensburg (Md.) was under 4 feet of water. At least nine residents of the frequently inundated area were moved out by rescue workers.

Icy roads made auto travel dangerous in the District and nearby Maryland and Virginia. The Weather Bureau warned motorists to stay away from secondary roads in mountainous sections of both States. Sanding crews worked on District bridges.

Union Station said some trains—depending on origin—are as much as eight to ten hours behind schedule.

"It will take days to straighten out some of these schedules," a station official said.

Bus companies reported their schedules were behind, but not seriously so.

National Airport reported that flights into and out of Washington were only slightly delayed, but added that flights were not leaving storm-struck cities.

It was a day of freak weather: Heavy rains in the morning; 5 a. m. reading of 58 degrees; strong, tree-felling winds; and a furious electrical storm.

All this was capped by the afternoon snow and the evening temperature drop.

The Weather Bureau's latest reading showed that 2 inches of show had fallen by 11 p. m.

The 11 p. m. temperature reading was 19 degrees.

At the expected 15-degree low, the reading would match the year's low—recorded last March 3.

Bureau forecasters said today's afternoon temperatures would go no higher than freezing—32 de-

15 Aboard Bus Stranded in Drift On Ohio Highway

LANCASTER, Ohio, Nov. 25 (AP). A Newark-Lancaster bus with 15 passengers aboard was reported stalled in snowdrifts tonight on Route 158, 7 miles north of here.

Three snowplows from Fairfield County which had been dispatched to the aid of the bus later became stalled in the snowdrifts and were unable to proceed.

Other snowplows were being sent from Newark in Licking County, about 20 miles away, it was announced.

Deputy Sheriff Wayne McCandlish of Fairfield County said the bus might not be reached until late tonight because the plows were taking a round-about route in an effort to get through the drifts.

New York City Disrupted by High Winds

At Least 5 Killed; Debris Blocks Streets, Hampers All Traffic

ATOP THE EMPIRE STATE BUILDING, NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (U.P.).—Hurricane winds up to 100 miles an hour rocked New York City today.

This tallest building in the world swayed 1½ inches under impact of the giant day long gusts that battered the Nation's largest city.

Subway tunnels were flooded. Electric lights went out in 407,000 homes and toppling lines knocked out 15,900 telephones.

Five persons were reported killed in the Metropolitan area and New Jersey. At least 35 were injured.

A power line fell across Brooklyn Bridge and traffic had to detour around it. Staten Island, with its 200,000 residents, was isolated temporarily because ferries dared not breast heaving harbor waters.

LaGuardia Airport was under water and a boat floated past parked airlines. A five-story building was blown down in the Bronx.

The wind whined past the observation tower atop the Empire State Building like a monstrous fire siren. Observatory Manager Frank Powell estimated wind velocity at this point, one fifth of a mile above the wet streets, at "85 miles an hour and possibly 100." He said it would blow a man off the open-air observatory deck as if he were a piece of paper.

Outside the observatory the wind swirled gray clouds at 1050 feet like smoke, and swept the red tile observation deck clear of rain as neatly as a wiper flicks water from an auto windshield.

Below, where pedestrians were being blown down on the streets, the wind flung gray sheets of rain at Manhattan's skyscrapers. Smoke that normally plumes and billows from chimneys of the tall buildings vanished in the gale, snuffed to nothing at the chimney tops.

This building swayed approximately 1½ inches "from the verti-

Year's Worst Fog Darkens London In Midafternoon

LONDON, Nov. 25 (U.P.)—The worst fog of the year descended on most of Britain today. By midafternoon it was dark in London. Road, rail and air travel was in chaos and Britons were told it may last several days.

A patchy morning fog turned into dirty yellowish murk from smoke belching from millions of chimneys, then thickened into coal-black mist.

All planes were grounded at London airports. Pedestrians groped along streets. Traffic crawled bumper to bumper. Trains were up to two hours late. Soccer matches and horse races were canceled in many areas.

In Glascow, 62 persons were injured, at least 15 seriously, when two double-decker buses collided.

'Red, White and Blue' Musical Has Legion in Red—and Blue

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

The American Legion is $600,000 in the red on "Red, White and Blue," the musical comedy it is sponsoring to help raise funds for veterans rehabilitation, it was learned last night.

The story of the show, from its October 7 opening in Los Angeles to Kansas City last night, has featured a theater fire, a train wreck, expected stars who never showed and disappointing advance billing.

Today the Legion's show committee is scheduled to "reappraise" the future of the musical at a Chicago meeting with its Hollywood producers.

Legionnaires hope the "Red, White and Blue" blues will partially vanish with a successful run in Chicago, slated to open January 1.

The hard-luck story was hinted at by the Army Times Vet Letter and confirmed last night by public relations officials at Legion headquarters here.

A top Legion spokesman assigned the musical's yet-to-be-successful showing to these factors:

1. Inadequate advance promotion with the consequence that the public thinks it is "just another amateur minstrel show." Actually it has an all-professional cast.

2. Unfilled promises by the Hollywood producers that big-name stars would join the musical.

3. An opening night fire in Los Angeles, which got the show off to a hectic and costly start. The blaze damaged some scenery and costumes.

So far the Legion has "committed $500,000" to keep the musical on the road according to the spokesman. He said another $100,000 has been authorized to bring the show into Chicago.

The official said Legionnaires in Chicago "are now going all-out" to make certain "Red, White and Blue" is a hit there.

"We also will step up local efforts in other Eastern cities, including Washington, in advance of the show's appearance," he said. No date has been set for the Washington showing.

"All we hope is to break even," said the official, "and I understant Arthur Godfrey and Morton Downey have offered to help us bail out by appearing as guest artists in some cities."

The American Legion voted to enter the show business last spring as a means to raise funds for veterans rehabilitation in hospitals.

Now rehabilitation is paid from membership dues.

2 D. C. Students Find Police Stubborn at Football Melee

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 25 (AP).—Eleven students were arrested early today during a pre-game riot in which a city councilor was slugged and hundreds of students threw beer cans. But they were out of jail in time for the Harvard-Yale football classic.

The students—10 Harvard men and one from Yale—all were convicted of drunkenness and, with one exception, their cases placed on file. Two of the students were fined for disturbing the peace.

Also scooped up by the 70 policemen sent to quell the riot was a tuxedo-clad junior college man and a non-academic drunk who was told by District Judge Arthur P. Stone, "You're in bad company."

The riot started about midnight when a rally in the college yard spilled out into Harvard Square. Traffic was halted by the milling students and beer cans and stones started flying.

Innocent bystanders were cut and bruised. Parked automobiles were dented by students standing or jumping on them. Trackless trolleys were stalled when their power connections were pulled from overhead wires.

City Councilor Edward J. Sullivan said his hat was pulled over his face by a student who punched and kicked him in the shins. The offender was shoved into a paddy wagon but no one is certain he stayed there. As the patrol wagon moved through the milling crowd, it was overrun by students and girls wanting to ride.

Two Washington men were picked up in the melee. They were Werner F. Furth, 20, and Charles Hartley, 19.

Mt. Etna, Europe's Highest Volcano, Again in Eruption

CATANIA, Sicily (Sunday) Nov. 26 (AP).—Mount Etna, Europe's highest volcano, erupted late last night, spurting flames which lighted Catania, 20 miles away, and causing panic in villages nearer the scene.

The night sky, angry and red, reflected the glow over miles of eastern Sicily. The eruption came with a series of heavy earthshocks and mushrooming clouds of smoke.

Longtime residents of Catania expressed fear the eruption would be the worst of this century. Two molten streams of lava poured down toward half a dozen little villages on the northeastern slope of the 10,741-foot high mountain.

The eruption began at 10 p. m. Saturday (4 p. m., EST). Within an hour the lava appeared from a distance to have poured as far as two miles down the mountainside from a huge new crater torn on the northeast side, about 300 feet from the peak. There are some 200 craters clustered near the peak of the mountain.

The nearest village is still four or five miles beyond the smouldering molten flow.

At midnight (6 p. m., EST) there were no reports of casualties.

The residents fled in panic from their little farming villages on the northwest slope. In Catania, on the southeast side, most of the 250,000 population turned out into the streets watching tongues of flame shoot from the crater.

The force of the eruption and the speed of the lava flow were described by residents of Catania

1 From Area Killed In Korea, 1 Missing

PVT. CLARENCE E. HANNEN
. . . Killed in action

A Branchville, Md., private has been killed in Korea, and the son of an Army Colonel here is missing in action, the Defense Department reported yesterday.

Killed in action November 6 was Pvt. Clarence E. Hannen, 20, son of Mr. and Mrs. James T. Hannen, of 5202 Kenesaw st., Daniels Park, Branchville.

Sergt. James Charles Caldwell, 31, son of Col. and Mrs. George L. Caldwell, of 4683 S. 34th st., Arlington, has been missing since November 2. Colonel Caldwell is stationed in the Office of the Surgeon-General of the Army here.

"Don't worry about me here, God is with me and He is enough for me. Prayer is swell, isn't it?—remember, we meet all the time in prayer."

Private Hannen's mother holds this message from somewhere in Korea very dear today. It was the last letter she received from her son.

A year ago last April, Pvt. Hannen was sent to Japan—shortly after enlisting. When hostilities broke out in Korea, he was among the first there.

His mother received letters then—but they hardly mentioned the war.

"Mother," he wrote, "please don't say anything about the war, just tell me about home." He did say he was with the Wolfhound Regiment—the hard-fighting Twenty-seventh of the Twenty-fifth Division.

The last letter she received from him was the prayerful note of September 11.

bracketed discussion, and would then have questions to ask about the Chinese Reds' role in Korea.

This afternoon's Council meeting had been suddenly arranged last night when Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Jacob A. Malik telephoned Mr. Bebler and told him the Chinese Communists wished to start debate on their charges against the United States this afternoon, if possible. A Council meeting must be formally requested by some Council member under the rules, so the Soviet Union sponsored the request.

But when Dr. Bebler and other Council delegates reached here at 2:30 p.m., they were met by Lie with a proposal to call off the session in view of the storm. Dr. Bebler said Lie had told him a hurricane was due in three or four hours. At the same time, two of the three power feeders into the U.N. headquarters had failed

Meantime, Nationalist Chinese Ambassador Tingfu F. Tsiang went on the air tonight with a recorded U. N. "Memo from Lake Success" program over the Columbia Broadcasting Company in which he said the chances of the Chinese Communists' getting China's U. N. seat "are decidedly worse than a year ago." He said: "My enemies' mistakes are beginning to cancel out the mistakes of my friends."

Dr. Tsiang said he would insist on a serious, thorough and impartial investigation by the U.N. Little Assembly of his year-old complaint of Soviet intervention ong behalf of the Chinese Communists. The Assembly Political Committee had voted this week to refer the case once again to that group.

Tht U.N. today agreed to turn the former Italian colony of Eritrea, with its 1,060,000 inhabitants, over to neighboring Ethiopia, to live as a separate home-rule area under Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie. Ethiopia itself has some 15 million people.

The transfer—which would swell Ethiopia's 350,000 square miles by another 50,000—would be completed by September 15, 1952, with aid of a U.N. Commissioner, working with British authorities, who have occupied the country since 1941.

The agreement was reached in the Assembly special political committee by a vote of 38 nations to 14, with eight abstentions—more than the two-thirds needed to insure ratification of the plan in a plenary session of the Assembly. Actually, a new effort to amend various sections will be attempted in the plenary session, but the basic plan is now assured.

by air spotters to be on the move southward near the center of the 80-mile front.

Allied warplanes, from Superforts to fighters, seared and blasted away at supply bases or at anything that moved along the roads which snake through the hills from Manchuria.

ROK Eighth Thrown Back

But the decisive struggle appeared to be shaping up in the northwest corner of Korea more than 200 miles southwest of Chongjin.

The Red counterattack on the northwest threw back the South Korean Eighth Division to a point near Yongum 22 air miles east of Tokchon on the extreme Allied right.

A United States First Corps spokesman said the attackers, presumably Chinese, might be trying to roll up the eastern end of the northwestern front.

He had no estimate of the size of the counterattacking force. Prisoners taken Friday said a full Chinese Red division was dug in about 10 miles north of Yongun.

The left side of the Allied front moved ahead for gains up to six miles against opposition which was steadily increasing in intensity.

Air observers who saw the 5000 Reds said they were converging five miles north of Kusong, before the United States Twenty-fourth and Second Divisions.

Kusong is 20 miles due north of Chongjin, which fell to the U. S. 24th Division Friday without a fight. Chongju, on the west coast, is 51 miles from the Manchurian border. United States troops struck out both west and north of the city.

One pilot said the Reds were "swarming all over the countryside." He reported long columns winding along the roads and over the frozen fields.

Americans poured heavy artillery fire into the area.

Both the American Twenty-fifth and Second Divisions moved cautiously forward on a 25-mile front intot the teeth of the Red build-up.

A United States Ninth Corps spokesman said they met "sporadic" resistance, heavier than that of Friday, first day of the general assault to wind up the fighting by Christmas.

A field dispatch said a task force of the Twenty-fifth Division captured a heavily defended hill position 2 miles southeast of Unsan and was battling counter attacking Reds. Unsan is 30 miles east of the Red build-up above Kusong.

Turkish artillery went into action in support of Twenty-fifth Division troops.

On the right of the Twenty-fifth, a regiment of the United States Second Division crossed the Chongchon River 20 miles south of Huichon. There it was about 50 air miles from the border.

Forward elements of the regiment pumped howitzer shells into a concentration of about 2000 Reds 12 miles south of Huichon, rail town and road junction 60 miles south of the North Korean refugee capital of Kanggye.

It was 35 miles north of Huichon that air observers Saturday said they saw 8000 Reds moving south.

war but felt it was necessary to form a united Korea.

The Americans said all of their group had been questioned at least once. Some were questioned as many as five times.

Among the questions asked were these:

Do you own property? How many brothers and sisters do you have? What work do you do? Do you vote? What percentage of your officers are college graduates? What percentage of your officers are West Pointers?

Only two liberated soldiers reported being questioned on the personnel and equipment of their unit.

The men said they were fed rice, barley, corn, meat, fish and greens—the same food Chinese troops were given.

All the soldiers said they were well treated. Medical supplies, however, were limited to bandages, iodine and morphine.

A book on China (title not given) was turned over to the soldiers. One of the prisoners was assigned to read it to his fellow captives.

Shortly before their release, the Americans were given lectures denouncing Amercian leaders. The Eighth Army release did not name them but correspondents learned the leaders assailed were President Truman, Secretary of State Acheson and General MacArthur.

The prisoners were told that millions of Chinese had signed the Stockholm appeal, a document issued at a Communist "peace" conference in Sweden.

One Red lecturer held up a package of American cigarettes and said: "Here is why you are fighting this war."

An Eighth Army officer said he assumed this was a jibe at capitalism.

The Americans said the Chinese who addressed them made no mention of the Russians. They saw no Russians while they were held.

The Americans said they were not required to work. They ate, slept and rested when not being questioned.

When one American said he needed shoes he was given a pair of straw woven sandals.

Some of the American soldiers observed that Chinese troops did not seem to care how the war went. The Reds felt, however, they were winning.

A second group of 30 American prisoners of war recovered Friday are being questioned by Eighth Army officers.

Taipei Sets Guerillas At Over 3 Millions

TAIPEI, Formosa, Nov. 25 (U.P.). The Nationalist China Ministry of Defense claimed today that 3,600,000 guerillas are fighting the Communist on the mainland under the unified command of Taipei.

The Ministry said the guerillas were active especially in central and southwest China from which most of the Red forces have been removed to be sent north.

3 Zagreb Seminary Officials Arrested

BELGRADE, Nov. 25 (NYHT). Three of the six senior officials of the largest Roman Catholic seminary in Yugoslavia have been arrested at Zagreb, in Croatia, by order of the government of Premier Marshal Tito, it was learned today from trustworthy sources.

The three men are: the Rev. Josip Salac, spiritual director of major (upper) classes at the seminary, reported arrested November 1; the Rev. Angelko Juric, a Jesuit, spiritual director of minor (lower) classes, said to have been arrested November 3; and the Rev. Mr. Talan, vice rector of major classes, said to have been arrested November 14.

The seminary in question is regarded as one of the remaining strongholds of the Catholic Church in Yugoslavia. It has 500 students and is said to be the mainstay of the church's efforts to train future Yugoslav priests. The arrests are being described as a severe blow to this program.

Trouble is reported to have begun for the seminary three months ago with the arrest of 14 students. The charges against them were based on the discovery of a rifle and anti-Tito leaflets in the possession of two of them. The leaflets were said to have borne the stamp, "U," an identification mark of the Ustachi, a pro-Nazi Croatian organization that had its principal strength at Zagreb during the war.

Five of the students were charged with attempting to revive the Ustachi in cooperation with lay students of the university of Zagreb, according to one account. Informed quarters said it appears that a small number of them were guilty. During the autumn, 21 other seminarists were arrested on similar chrages.

Persons acquainted with these developments said today that the arrests have lost the character of a move by the Yugoslav Communist government to crush an alleged conspiracy. They said the three officials held are innocent and that their arrest represents a new and important step in Marshal Tito's conflict with the Catholic church.

Europe Assembly Moves for Gradual Sovereignty Yielding

STRASBOURG, France, Nov. 25 (AP).—The European Consultative Assembly set out today on a new road toward European federation, with a stopover scheduled at "special authorities."

"Special authorities" is the disarming title for a gradual and progressive delegation of power that assemblymen propose to lead to an eventual genuine authority over western Europe's defense, foreign policy, finances and commerce.

It is a new name for federal government.

National sovereignty, it seems, is to be surrendered piece by piece, instead of in a single package, but it will be surrendered just the same if the Assembly has its way.

The Assembly doesn't always have its way. A discussion group made up of delegates from 15 European nations, it forms the lower house of the Council of Europe—a sort of embryo parliament. Assembly decisions are subject to veto by any member of the Committee of Foreign Ministers, the upper house.

But the Assembly has begun work on a new statute intended to bring member nations into closer union. For the immediate present, the Assembly has:

1. Called for West German troops to take an equal role in a unified European army, linked to the North Atlantic alliance, under a permanent defense organization. Acceding to British reserve, the Assembly omitted the word "supranational" from its decision, but refused to rule it out for future consideration.

2. Encouraged member governments to set up joint special authorities for economic, agricultural and industrial matters and eventually for defense. The six nations now negotiating a treaty based on the Schuman coal-steel plan — France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg — were urged to complete their talks as soon as possible.

In each case the member nations, not always the same ones, would assign specified powers to a supranational authority that would be responsible to a joint parliament made up of members of the respective national legislatures.

The idea is that these men would be picked from national delegations here in the Assembly. They would, in effect, be special committees of the Assembly and would report to the Assembly on their activities.

Assembly President Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium said today that, once a number of special authorities exists, the need to coordinate them will be evident to every one.

As Spaak spoke, two Assembly committees began work on the projects for agricultural and transport pool authorities.

Britain's standoffish attitude is a subject of concern and the Assembly inserted a clause urging pool governments to work out means for "associating" other Council members in their common actions.

Chamber Permits Hours-Long Study

CHICAGO, Nov. 25 (AP).—Improved equipment that permits scientists to watch cosmic ray and other atomic collisions for hours at a time was described today.

Details of the new cloud chamber were presented to the American Physical Society by three atomic scientists from the Brookhaven National Laboratory, Upton, N. Y.

Atomic particles and cosmic rays streak through the atmosphere at speeds approaching that of light. However, they can be seen only when they pass through a box containing a vapor. They produce trails similar to vapor trails left by high-flying aircraft.

The new equipment diffuses vapor continuously throughout the chamber recording all the tracks and collisions that occur. The scientists are Drs. E. C. Fowler, D. H. Miller, R. P. Shutt and A. M. Thorndike.

Vital Bavarian Election Today

FRANKFURT, Germany, Nov. 25 (U.P.)—Four million Bavarians are expected to vote Sunday in a state election that may hand the Western allies and Federal Chancellor Konrad Adenauer another setback in their plans to rearm Germans for the defense of Europe.

Adenauer's Christian Democratic Party (CDU) still is smarting from defeats last Sunday in the States of Hesse and Wuerttemberg-Baden. Socialists, campaigning against rearmament, won absolute control of the Hesse state legislature and outpolled the CDU in Wuerttemberg-Baden.

Christian Democrats have dominated agricultural, Catholic Bavaria since 1946 and are expected to remain the strongest party. But any Socialist inroads on that strength will be regarded as another sign of increasing sentiment against putting Germans back into uniform.

Socialist Chief Kurt Schumacher personally led the party campaign in Bavaria, thumping on the issue of Adenauer's willingness to furnish troops for an international army.

Adenauer, in an effort to bolster Christian Democrats, announced in Bonn last night that he has asked the allies for a "security treaty" to replace the occupation statute.

Fourteen parties are in the race but six are expected to garner most of the votes. They are the Christian Democrats, the Socialists, the Free Democrats, the Bavarian Party (advocating a separate Bavarian nation), the Refugee Party (campaigning for the first time) and the right-wing Reconstruction Party, led by the self-styled "blond Hitler," Alfred Loritz.

U. S. Is Seen Losing Battle for Iran's Oil

TEHRAN, Iran, Nov. 25 (AP).—America is in danger of losing the coldwar battle to keep Iran and her oil fields from slipping into the Russian orbit.

That's the fear of United States diplomats and other foreign observers here. They are worried about Soviet economic and propaganda gains in recent weeks.

The United States Embassy today announced Ambassador Henry F. Grady is being recalled to Washington for "routine consultations" and will take a plane Sunday. Informed sources said the read purpose is to give Grady a chance to make a first-hand report to the State Department on the decline of American prestige and the rise of pro-Soviet sentiment in Iran. Grady will spend about three weeks in Washington.

He is expected to press for speedy action to complete a $25,000,000 Export-Import Bank loan to Iran, on which negotiations have been dragging since July. One of the biggest reasons for criticism of the United States in the Iranian press and Parliament has been the delay in extending American aid.

[The oil committee of the Iranian Majlis (Parliament) today rejected the supplementary agreement signed last year between the Iranian government and representatives of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Co., the United Press reported.

[Financially, the rejection, if adopted by the Majlis in open session, will mean 140 million dollars in royalties for the government. Present annual oil production in Iran is 30 million tons.]

Different Tactics Adopted

The soft voice of professed Soviet friendship—backed by a 20 million dollar trade treaty—has been substituted for the Kremlin threats and frontier incidents that have made Iranians jittery for the last five years.

The signing of the Russo-Iranian barter trade agreement this month was greeted by a relieved outburst of pro-Soviet sentiment.

"The war of nerves is beginning to pay off for the Russians here," one Western-educated Iranian said. "Our people have been frightened—with reason, of course—at Soviet Russia's hostile attitude since the end of the war. Now they are grasping at the sudden Russian friendship move like a drowning man at a straw."

It's only natural for Iran to try to "get along" with her colossal northern neighbor. Fifteen million Iranians rightly feel they would be helpless if the Red army started marching to the Indian Ocean.

Few Straws in Wjnd

It's too early to be certain, but there are signs that Prime Minister Ali Razmara's government—which only four months ago was regarded as strongly pro-American—may be headed in the direction of Soviet appeasement. A few straws in the wind:

Radio Tehran has stopped relaying Voice of America programs; Soviet economic influence is on the increase in the northern provinces; anti-American press attacks and Parliament speeches are growing in intensity; court action is under way to free leaders of the Tudeh (Communist) Party who were jailed last year; there are increasing restrictions of travel of foreigners in the country—a move that hits Americans harder than any other nationality.

Premier Razmara cannot be described as pro-Russian. It's becoming increasingly clear that he probably is not pro-American, either.

Razmara himself would say he is only pro-Iranian. There is no doubt he is embarked on the traditional Iranian political game of playing Russia against America—and Britain, to a lesser degree.

May Seek Aid Speedup

Razmara may be flirting with the Russians as a means to induce the United States to speed up long-talked-of economic aid. What worries Western diplomats is that he may let the Russians get their foot so far into the Iranian doorway that they can't be backed out.

If Iranian-Russian trade develops as expected, agricultural producers in the northern provinces will become virtually dependent on Russian markets.

The trade agreement also will reopen the door to spreading Russian propaganda. Sixteen Soviet consulates were closed last year in Iran. Under the trade agreement the Russians will open trade and transport offices in eight northern cities—Meshed, Sari, Resht, Tabriz, Rezaieh, Pahlevi, Julfa and Bajgiran.

United States Ambassador Henry F. Grady is known to have warned Washington that the situation can become critical unless Iranians can see some visible evidence of United States economic support soon.

So far the only sign of United States economic assistance has been the offer of a 25-million-dollar loan from the Export-Import bank. But negotiations over a host of details have been dragging along for five months.

There are many reasons for reluctance of the Export-Import Bank, State Department, and other Government agencies to put money into Iran. The primary factor has been the conviction that any assistance would have been wasted by previous corrupt governments.

O'Conor Seeks M'Arthur Help On Red Trade

Senator Herbert R. O'Conor (D., Md.) said yesterday he will ask Gen. Douglas MacArthur's help in "possible prosecution in Japan" of individuals and firms responsible for shipping more than four million pounds of copper to Communist China.

O'Conor said his commerce subcommittee had found the shipments of the strategic metal had been made from Japan for "ostensible" use in the United States, and that the copper then had been re-shipped to China. Under a MacArthur order, shipment of strategic metals from Japan to China is illegal.

Earlier this wek O'Conor said at least 14,474 tons of "possible strategic supplies" had been shipped to Red China through West Coast Japanese ports since start of the Korean war.

He said yesterday he is sending to MacArthur the testimony taken by his subcommittee concerning the copper shipments from Japan to Red China, via New York. He said "devious methods" had been used to circumvent MacArthur's ban.

"It appears this double shipment around the world has resulted in evasion, if not actual violation of the Japanese export laws, and I think it necessary that all facts concerning these copper shipments be referred to SCAP for possible prosecution in Japan of certain individuals or firms connected with these shipments," O'Conor said.

In several weeks of hearings, O'Conor's committee has questioned officials of the Isbrandtsen Steamship Co., whose vessels have transported some of the materials, and other persons who have been active in their purchase and sale on the international market.

Leader Doubts Invasion Now In Indo-China

SAIGON, Indo-China, Nov. 25 (U.P.). — French Commander-in-Chief Gen. Marcel Carpentier today said there was no indication a Chinese Communist invasion of Indo-China is imminent.

Carpentier answered a United Press questionnaire in connection with the Peiping radio charges that French troops had violated the Chinese Communist border.

Some observers considered the Peiping charge, which the French denied, a possible pretext for the movement of Chinese Communist troops into Indo-China.

The general said "there is no new evidence" that either Red China troops or planes have crossed the Indo-Chinese frontier.

Carpentier said it is "possible but not certain," that Chinese Communist forces, while not undertaking outright invasion, are "cooperating and intervening on the side of the Viet Minhs." He did not elaborate on this statement.

Meanwhile, a French high command spokesman said French forces had abandoned Tanmai, 15 miles west of the China Sea fort of Moncay, and then battled their way back into the outpost after three days of violent fighting.

The spokesman admitted the French had suffered heavy casualties during the three-day battle. Tanmai guards the western approaches to Moncay, last great China frontier bastion still in French hands.

Uruguay Votes For President And Congress

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, Nov. 25 (U.P.).—More than one million men and women will vote Sunday to elect a new president, a new congress, state governors and city officials.

Ten presidential candidates will seek election for the four-year term beginning March 1, 1951, but six of them virtually are out of the running.

The Colorado (Government) Party, of moderate Socialistic tendency, which has ruled Uruguay for the past 85 years, has nominated three presidential candidates. Under the Uruguayan system, the total votes cast for the various candidates of one party eventually is credited to the candidate polling the greatest number of votes.

Andres Martinez Trueba, 64, prominent legislator and economist, is the nominee of the Colorado faction closest to President Luis Batlle Berres. He resigned recently as Central Bank president.

Cesar Mayo Gutierrez, 58, now vice president of Uruguay and Senate president, is supported by the Colorado faction that has the important newspaer El Dia as its mouthpiece.

All other Colorado splinter groups are backing Dr. Eduardo Blanco Acevedo, 67, formerly Interior Minister.

The outstanding opposition candidate is the venerable Dr. Luis Alberto Herrera, 77, running for the sixth time as standard-bearer of the Blanco Nationalist Party. He probably will poll the highest individual vote, as before, but his vote is unlikely to surpass the combined total of the three Colorado party candidates.

Hundreds in Air Force Get Special Training On Priming, Handling A-Bomb, Dean Reveals

By the United Press

Special knowledge on how to "prime" and handle the atomic bomb has been imparted to "hundreds" of Air Force men under a secret training program that is gaining momentum, it was disclosed yesterday.

Among those already highly trained are members of the Strategic Air Command who continually fly B-36 superbomber missions simulating those that would be carried out in a new world war. Should war come, these crews are believed to know now what their targets would be.

Air Force sources revealed that 150,000 persons, or nearly one-third of the 480-000-man Air Force, are involved in varying degrees in the atomic bomb program. Army and Navy men are receiving similar training, but in smaller numbers, and eventually, some knowledge of the use of atomic weapons will be a part of every airman's training.

These facts were brought out after Chairman Gordon Dean of the Atomic Energy Commission, disclosed that the Government has a large force training in use of the A-bomb.

Dean made his statement in an interview with U. S. News & World Report, and said it was inevitable that the circle of people having access to atomic information had to be widened.

The scope of this is indicated by the training program but, as Dean pointed out, only a few people actually know how to make the bomb.

"It is the Air Force's objective to train everyone, at different levels, in use of this weapon," a high-ranking officer said.

Specialists in "priming"—apparently installing the bomb's firing apparatus—and handling the bomb must go through 18 months of rigorous training after their general schooling is completed. These are the ones who number in "the hundreds."

The bomb, one officer said with fine conservatism, "is slightly different from other bombs. It requires training, different ground-handling equipment, different bomb racks, and different in-flight checking procedures."

At the top of the training ladder are nuclear physicists—Air Force officers who hold doctorate degrees and now work at the Los Alamos, N. M., atomic installations.

There are 16 at present. Eighty-five officers are attending schools where a few will receive doctorates, the remainder becoming masters of science. Sixty more will enter schools next year.

Then there are hundreds of enlisted men receiving special training in electronics and mathematics up to the calculus level.

Among the officers, 75 percent of the Air Force generals and almost all the staff officers at headquarters here have received special indoctrination courses. In addition, 1400 officers have received advanced instruction at Sandia, N. M.

Farmer's Share Of Food Dollar Up to 49 Cents

The Department of Agriculture reported yesterday that farmers got 49 cents of each dollar consumers spent for farm food products in September.

That was one cent more of the farm food consumer dollar than farmers got in August and the highest so far this year. The farm share in September last year was 47 cents.

The record farm share of the consumer dollar spent for farm food was 55 cents in April, 1918, and April, 1945.

The September increase came from the sale of dairy products, poultry and eggs, fruits and vegetables.

LIEUT. ANN QUIGLEY
. . . Near the fighting front

Former Nurse at Gallinger Serves Near Korean Front Line

A former Gallinger Hospital nurse has been doing front-line duty in Korea, word received here yesterday disclosed.

She is 1st Lieut. Ann Quigley, 28, of 3520 34th st. nw.

Lieutenant Quigley is assigned to the 8076 "Spirit of '76" Mobile Surgical Hospital, attached to the Second Division. This is the nearest to the front lines of any Army hospital.

How busy the 60-bed unit has been is indicated by its treating 1000 patients in a week.

Although an Army nurse, Lieutenant Quigley has had little shore duty. Most of her nursing has been aboard Army transports, that has taken her to Turkey, Trieste, Egypt, Australia, Italy, Germany and France.

Before entering the Army Lieutenant Quigley was a nurse at Gallinger from September 1944 to April 1945.

She was born in Ireland, where her mother, Mrs. Mary Ann Quigley, still lives. Her "home" here is with her aunt, Mrs. Beatrice M. McCarthy.

Leads From Assassin's Notebook Followed

By the United Press

The Secret service is investigating about 100 persons whose names were found in a notebook on the body of the Puerto Rican slain while trying to assassinate President Truman, it was learned yesterday.

Scores of Secret Service agents have been detatched from their normal duties to take part in the coast-to-coast roundup.

Some of those named are friends of the dead assassin, Grisello Torresola. Others are members of the fanatical Puerto Rican Nationalist movement in which he played a leading role.

At least two of them have been arrested within the past week. Others still are being grilled. And authoritative sources said that before the inquiry is closed, thousands of men and women may be questioned about one phase or another of the assassination plot.

The names were written on cards found in a notebook in Torresola's pocket after he was shot down by White House police on November 1.

The persons named in Torresola's notebook are scattered in cities throughout the United States. All will be cross-checked until the Secret Service is satisfied the Nationalist movement is not plotting any further attempts on the President's life.

Federal agents arrested two of them in New York Wednesday night on charges of conspiracy to assassinate the President. They are Juan Bernardo Lebron and Julio Pinto Gandia.

Air Force Mascot Shifts To Marines

When a Briton is harnessed with an Irish name and after a career in the Air Force becomes a Marine Corps "boot," it could be a doggone shame.

Duffy O'Gallager, though, is an old dog-face who has taken vicissitudes of name and transfer of service in his short, bow-legged stride.

Duffy, an English bull, was brought up from a prop wash pup Air Force Maj. James M. Norwood of 3105 Montrose ave., Alexandria, Va.

Recently, when Norwood received orders to report to Moscow as assistant air attache, he looked around for a military berth for Duffy.

Since the Marine Corps always has claimed the bulldog as a mascot, he thought it only natural that Duffy change services.

A dispatch went out from the Pentagon offering Duffey to the First Marine installation that drafted him. He turned up at Cherry Point, assigned to march with the Second Marine Air Wing Band.

Officials at Cherry Point, with an eye on unification, report that except for an unexpected visit by Norwood when military discipline gave way and Duffy broke ranks, transfer of service personnel has gone along without noticeable hitch.

Flaws Seen in Armed Services Courses

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

Pity the professor with more than two million students—most of them there under orders rather than by choice—who has to get over such topics as:

1. The Theory of Communism.
2. The United States Stand in Korea.
3. The Situation in Indochina.
4. Stop That Rumor.

There you have—in small measure—the projects of the Armed Forces Information and Education Division. They are part of the continuing process of keeping soldiers informed on national policy—which they may have to defend with their lives.

The program has the hearty indorsement of the top brass, such as Gen. Mark W. Clark, chief of the Army Field Forces. He approved it thus in a recent letter:

"I cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of keeping our soldiers fully informed concerning the necessity for their service in the Army, why they fight and why they must be sent to overseas garrisons to perform essential occupation duties. A sound troop information program will, of course, answer these inevitable questions before they are asked by the individual soldier.

"In addition, the program must instill in our soldiers a full appreciation of the blessings they enjoy by living under our democratic system, and of their responsibility of citizenship to preserve these blessings for this and future generations."

To see how the program actually works out, a reporter sat in on a session for Fort Myer, Va., officers Friday and then listened as they commented on how the program is working out in the ranks.

First Lieut. Roy G. Lindquist of Rockford, Ill., 29-year-old Pacific veteran, conducted the session. He is also attending the University of Maryland as a history senior.

Lindquist showed a series of slides with pictures of such persons as Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, new Assistant Secretary of Defense, and Mao Tse-tung, Chinese Communist leader, and the officers quickly identified them. "He's the guy that's got the squeeze on Communist China," a major declared about the latter.

Then Lundquist made a 15-minute talk on Tibet—"Roof of the World," covering its geography, government and present situation. He described Tibet as the "least known country on earth," but then gave many facts provided in a printed Armed Forces Talk, one of a series issued by the Defense Department for such session.

At the end he tossed out a question: "What do you think will be the position of Tibet in the future?"

The answers came, reluctantly at first, and usually in simple terms, not always in polished sentences. The officers seemed to be thinking about the query and some obviously enjoyed the chance to address their co-workers. Others of the 55 present never opened their mouths during the entire hour.

Toward the end of the hour, Col. James V. Cole, post commander, and Col. Arthur P. Moore, I. and E. officer of the Military District of Washington, asked how the officers felt about the program when it reached into the ranks.

One officer complained that many men "are not widely enough read; they don't read the newspapers; the same men answer the questions all the time."

Another said the Armed Forces talk was pitched over the heads of his men. "You have to twist your own arm to read through it," he said.

Colonel Cole summed up the criticisms as:

"We're not talking their language."

From Now On There Will Be Christmas Carols

Now that Thanksgiving is past, we can all expect a solid month of listening to Christmas Carols. When we hear enough of them over the radio or TV, we can turn them off. But there will be no escaping the 12-hour daily barrage that will assail our ears from loud speakers in shop windows and store fronts all over town.

While many people cry out against this abuse of the gentle Christmas Carols handed down to us from antiquity, for the life of me, I can't see it as an unmixed nuisance. Like you, I deplore the repetition and the blatancy of much of this broadcasting, but it has its significance.

To me, it seems that this is part of a national groping for the beauties of music. In spots, the groping may be blind, but it is nevertheless groping. As a people, we seem to be realizing, more and more, the important part that good music can play in setting a good national mood.

That, in itself, is a long step towards complete civilization. If all the world should suddenly become aware of the power of good music for good, there would be very little trouble between peoples.

I'll admit that when speakers on each of four corners are simultaneously blaring four different Carols, it may be difficult to maintain this charitable view of the situation. But this is the season for charity, isn't it?

Answers to Inquiries On Employes' Status Under New Orders

(This is the last of three columns on the recent and sweeping changes in the Civil Service system. Today's column explains some of the major changes in the form of questions and answers from readers.)

Q. The President's order permits the Civil Service Commission to make some probational appointments that will lead to full Civil Service status after December 1. Can you give me a list of the jobs?

A. Civil Service hasn't completed the list. It has approved these: junior professional assistants, junior management assistants, and junior scientific jobs.

Q. I'm a career employe and I have an opportunity to transfer to another agency at a higher grade. My office has refused to release me. What can I do?

A. The new Civil Service regulations, despite a contrary belief, doesn't give the head of your agency the authority to veto your transfer. Furthermore, it makes no difference whether you resign to take the new job or if you transfer to it—you'll be "indefinite" in that job in any event.

Q. My temporary appointment was converted to permanent as of November 15. Am I now eligible for a grade promotion?

A. You can't be grade-promoted until you have served at least six months after November 15, the conversion date of your appointment.

Q. I'm a career employe. On October 1. I transferred from Interior to the Army in a "vital" job. Do I have reemployment rights to my old job in Interior?

A. No; not under present Civil Service rules. However, something may be done at a later date to give you job protection.

Q. I worked for the Government three years and had a permanent status before I resigned in 1941. Am I eligible for reinstatement?

A. Yes; you can be rehired on an "indefinite" basis without being given a competitive test for any job for which you can meet the minimum Civil Service requirements.

Q. I am a permanent employe but a month ago I was given a temporary grade promotion. Have I lost any of my rights or benefits?

A. No; you'll retain full rights and privileges in your temporary grade promotion, provided your temporary promotion was in your own agency.

Q. I have been given a temporary grade promotion in my agency and I've been told I have "retreat" rights. What are "retreat" rights?

A. It means this—you retain the right to "retreat" back to the job and grade you held as of September 1. That's the worst that can happen to you under the Whitten rider. On the other hand, your agency, at some future and undetermined date, can make permanent your present temporary promotion.

Q. I was given a temporary grade promotion on October 15 and I expect to be called up for active military service in about a month. On my return, which job will I be restored to?

A. You have legal rights to your permanent job which cancels out any temporary grade promotions you may have received. However, you can look for the Civil Service Commission to urge Federal agencies to restore returning veterans to jobs that would include any temporary grade promotions they received before entering military service.

Q. Are veterans given preference for the temporary and indefinite jobs?

A. Yes; veterans will get the usual preference on Civil Service tests and in appointments for indefinite jobs. In addition, after they have been on the job for a year, the veterans' preference act will apply to give them greater job security during layoffs and downgradings.

Q. Are postal employes covered by the Whitten rider?

A. Yes; all Federal agencies and employes, classified, per diem, and postal, are covered by the Whitten rider. It makes no difference whether your agency is under Civil Service or not, it's covered just the same.

Q. Is there any restrictions on promotions that can be given postal and per diem workers?

A. Yes; but it'll apply on a dollar basis instead of the grade system for classified employes. After December 1, a Grade 5 ($3100) or a higher classified employe can be given only one grade promotion every six months, but the time he has served will count toward a grade promotion. Also, no employe under Grade 10 ($5060) can be given more than a two-grade jump, and employes Grade 10 and above cannot be given more than a one-grade promotion at any time. Civil Service, however, can waive this general rule in exceptional cases.

Q. How will permanent employes be laid off under the new system?

A. The present A retention group will be split into several subgroups as follows: In Subgroup 1 will be those permanents who retain their present jobs and grades; in Subgroup 2 will be persons who have been given indefinite grade promotions in their agencies; Subgroup 3 will be those persons who transferred to other agencies with or without reemployment rights, and in Subgroup 4 will be those temporary employes who are eligible for full Civil Service status under the President's order of last August 29.

District Rent Control Bill Vote Hinted

New Session Also May Finish With Measure Adding to Planners' Powers

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Bills for extension of District rent control and for increasing powers of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission may come up for Congress' attention in the session starting Monday.

The District rent-control law now runs through January 31. A move to get a further extension in the new session would be keyed to the idea of avoiding a deadline rush when the Eighty-second Congress begins work. Senate District Chairman Matthew M. Neely (D., W. Va.) is having a bill drafted to provide a five-month extension and give more time for considering the law in the next session.

Home-Rule Drive Planned

A Senate-approved bill to enlarge the powers of the planning commission is before the House District Committee, and may be considered in the new session. A chief purpose of the bill is to give the agency a stronger hand in public planning through the Washington Metropolitan area as a whole, rather than just the District portion of that area. Maryland and Virginia representatives would be added to the Commission, which already includes District representatives.

In the House, proponents of the Washington home-rule bill plan a quick final drive to seek 22 additional signatures to bring the measure to the House floor. Signatures of 196 members have been placed on the petition to discharge the House District Committee from further consideration of the Senate-approved home-rule bill. Addition of 22 signatures would boost the total to the House majority needed to call the bill directly to a House vote.

This week will bring the deadline for completing the petition, and sponsors concede there is only a slim chance the needed additional signatures will be obtained.

Vote Only on December 11

The deadline is fixed by the fact that if the petition were completed, seven days of House sessions would have to elapse before the bill could be called up, and the calling of the bill to a vote would have to take place December 11. This date is fixed by a House rule that permits discharged bills to be called up only on the second and fourth Mondays of each month. December 11 is the second Monday; December 25 is the fourth Monday.

The bill would give the District a representative governing council and city manager in place of the present Commissioner setup.

Hearings may also be arranged during the short session on the Neely bill for regulating wire tapping in the District. The bill would fix a maximum penalty of 10 years and $10,000 fine for unauthorized wire tapping. It would require that a District Court order be issued for any wire tapping to be done by law-enforcement officers.

Two District nominations are also expected to receive Senate attention. They are the nominations of John A. Remon for membership in the District Redevelopment Land Agency, and Andrew J. Howard, jr., to be associate judge of Municipal Court.

Gunman Flees With $40 From Store Register

An armed bandit last night held up the manager of the Capitol Market, 300 Maryland ave. ne., and escaped with $40 from the cash register.

Manager Leo Brody, 51, of 1300 Staples st. ne., told police he was alone when the bandit entered about 10 p. m. and pointed a revolver at him, demanding money.

The bandit became panicky when the telephone started to ring and a customer entered the store, Brody said. Tearing the telephone from the wall, he fled. Brody said he was a young man wearing a brown hat and dark overcoat.

Poker Game Holdup Nets Pair $600

Masked Youths Fail In Earlier Attempt At Suitland Tavern

Two masked bandits crashed a kitchen poker game in Suitland, Md., at 3 a. m. yesterday and fled after scooping up $600.

Prince Georges County police reported the same armed youths were thwarted a few minutes earlier when they tried to hold up a Suitland bar as it was closing.

The successful holdup was staged in the home of George M. Beltz, 48, a building inspector, of 4825 Meadow View rd., Suitland. He and four friends were playing poker in the kitchen, he told police, when the bandits entered.

One was wearing a cap pulled down on his forehead, with sunglasses, and a bandanna over his nose and mouth, police said. There was no concrete description of the second man, and because of this police broadcast no lookout.

Beltz told police one of the gunmen said "This is not a toy I'm holding. If you don't believe me, just make a move."

Mrs. Beltz said she slept through the holdup.

The attempted holdup, at Hainey's Bar on Suitland rd., just a block from Beltz's house, was thwarted by two men who were inside.

They are Charles Phillips, of Morningside, Md., and Torrence Cease, of Hillcrest Heights. Phillips said he opened the door to let musicians out of the bar, when one of the bandits stuck his hand through the door and shouted "Stick 'em up. This is a holdup."

Phillips said he and Cease slammed the door shut, and kept it shut, even though the bandits were yelling, "Let us in, or someone is going to get shot."

Bethesda Power Station Blast Blacks Out Large County Area

restore service to the other areas, where it was resumed by 3:30 p. m.

When first restored, however, the power was very weak in some homes. Pepco officials asked residents to use as little electricity as possible during the afternoon. Following further repairs, the power was strengthened to nearly normal.

At 5:30 p. m. the entire Bethesda, Chevy Chase, Rockville and Gaithersburg areas were blacked out for about a half hour so that additional repairs could be made.

Montgomery County General Hospital at Sandy Spring was without electricity and heat from the time of the explosion until 4 p. m. Flashlights and candles were used during the day, and patients were given extra blankets to keep warm. An emergency operation was performed under small floodlights powered by batteries in the operating room.

The Bethesda-Chevy Chase Rescue Squad furnished portable motor generators for Suburban Hospital in Bethesda, for corridor lights, the laboratory and incubators. The hospital used its own auxiliary battery power supply in the operating and delivery rooms.

The Naval Hospital at Bethesda started up its own emergency generators immediately after the blast.

The explosion, heard by residents in a five-block radius, climaxed trouble in the automatic circuit breakers, which started shortly after midnight and left a number of scattered homes without power, company officials said.

Trouble shooters had been on duty in the automatic substation through the night. Residents in the vicinity reported they heard continuous rumblings and hissings from the station.

Robert E. Scott assistant foreman and a trouble shooter had just relieved another trouble shooter shortly before the explosion. He was alone in the building when it occurred. He escaped injury by diving under a table.

The entire thick rear wall was blown out on the second floor, and the second floor wall on the west side of the building was forced out at an angle, so that it barely supported the roof. The first floor was left intact.

Cause of the explosion could not be determined immediately, company officials said because of the hazardous condition of the second floor.

They theorized, however, that the failure of an automatic circuit breaker, which probably caused the trouble earlier in the night, may have resulted in a leakage of insulating oil.

The leaking oil, in turn, set up an oil vapor which was either ignited by an electric spark, or possibly by a flash of lightning. Officials pointed out, however, that the building was heavily insulated against lightning.

The substation contained about 18 circuit breakers, each of which contained 35 to 40 gallons of oil.

Although the noise of the blast aroused residents in the vicinity, only two buildings other than the substation itself were damaged.

The rear windows of the Bethesda Moose Lodge, 7925 Georgetown rd., whose rear side is separated from the rear of the substation by 150 feet, were shattered. James A. Zimmerman, staying at the lodge temporarily, was asleep in a back room but escaped injury from flying glass.

A second floor window in the nearby home of Fred Zimmerman, at 4934 Auburn ave., was also shattered by the blast.

About 125 Pepco employes were called out immedately to set up auxiliary equipment in the yard beside the damaged building. A construction crew also was put to work at once to support the west wall and the sagging roof with telephone poles.

The substation yard, surrounded by a high wire fence, was littered with tons of brick, mortar, cement and steel girders.

Montgomery County police at Bethesda and Rockville were swamped with telephone calls after the blast and blackout. They operated their two-way radio circuits with the aid of squad cars parked in front of the stations.

Montgomery County firemen were called to the scene of the explosion, but found that a small fire that followed the blast had burned itself out by the time they got there.

Navy Laboratory Work Is Awarded To District Firm

The Navy announced yesterday that a Washington firm, Plymouth Electrical Construction Co., Inc., has been awarded a contract to install a 132,000-volt underground electrical system at the Naval Aeronautical Turbine Laboratory at Trenton, N. J.

The company's bid was $228,000, the Navy's Bureau of Yards and Docks announced.

The laboratory, when completed, will run performances of gas turbine engines at conditions simulating altitudes up to 65,000 feet. The laboratory will be one of the largest of its kind in the world, and will cost 22 million dollars.

Drive Nets $1950

The benefit dance of the Prince Georges General Hospital Guild September 23 netted a profit of $1950. The proceeds will be used, according to Mrs. William Bowie, guild president, toward equipping the major operating room in the hospital's new addition.

D. C. Officers Criticized in County Raid

'Snag' Lewis Lawyer Charges Attempt to Discredit Maryland

Lawyers for William (Snags) Lewis charged yesterday that District law enforcement officials tried to discredit Prince Georges County and the State of Maryland when they crossed into the county to arrest Lewis and 18 other indicted gamblers

"The raid (19 months ago) was made with the full intent to suggest that only the United States Attorney's office in Washington is honest," Attorney William L. Collins told three Maryland Circuit Court judges in Marlboro.

The charge was made as Collins asked the judges to quash the warrant under which Lewis and the others were arrested at 4310 46th st., Bladensburg, Md., in one of eight simultaneous raids March 25, 1949, under the direction of United States Attorney George Morris Fay.

Prince Georges State's Attorney A. Gwynn Bowie refused to comment on Collins' charges. He argued that the warrant has been approved by the United States Court of Appeals for the District.

Federal officers from Washington have no right to get a warrant in Maryland, from the United States Commissioner in Montgomery County and use it to arrest persons in Prince Georges County, Collins also said.

After three hours of argument, Circuit Judges Charles C. Marbury, John B. Gray, jr., and J. Dudley Digges took the motion to quash under advisement, and said they would decide the case "as soon as practicable."

The defendants, less five women, were indicted and tried in the District in November, 1949, with the case ending in a hung jury. Lewis was convicted later in another gambling case growing out of the raid, but his conviction was set aside by the United States Court of Appeals.

Sesqui Board To Vote on Fate of Play

The Sesqui Centennial Executive Committee expects to vote Thursday on continuing the "Faith of Our Fathers" drama next year in the Rock Creek amphitheater.

Executive Vice Chairman Melvin D. Hildreth said the future of the drama would top the agenda of an executive committee meeting he has called for 3:30 p. m. Thursday.

The new Sesqui official also told a reporter he has asked for an appointment with President Truman, honorary chairman of the Sesquicentennial Commission, on Tuesday or Wednesday.

Hildreth said he wants to discuss the possibility of a special joint session of Congress to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the first meeting of Congress here. The idea was first proposed to the President by Carter T. Barron, former Sesqui vice chairman who died two weeks ago.

Last Wednesday was the anniversary of this historic event.

$1000 Pinball Firm License Ordered by Arlington Board

If they want to stay in business, pinball machine distributors operating in Arlington County will have to pour 20,000 nickels—$1000 into the county coffers next year for each machine there.

The county board, at a closed informal meeting Friday night, voted unanimously to raise the annual county distributors' license fee to a flat $1000, which equals the present State tax.

The move is designed to rid the county of the machines, because said Board Chairman Dan Dugan, "We are convinced gambling is the primary purpose of most of these machines."

To cinch the program, the county board also voted to hike the tax on each nickel machine to $200 a year and to $300 on each machine in which dimes are inserted.

These new taxes will hit the owners of establishments where the machines are located. In the past they have paid a flat $25 a year on each machine.

The new ordinance was drafted by Commonwealth's Attorney Denman Rucker. It is to be formally voted into existence at the board's regular open meeting next Saturday, Dugan said.

The stiffer rates will become effective January 1.

Sponsor of Alexandria Tax On Cigarettes to Seek Repeal

The councilman who sponsored Alexandria's 2-cents-per-pack cigarette tax announced last night he would move for repeal of the measure.

Councilman Marshall J. Beverly proposed the controversial tax last June as an emergency measure. He said that he would ask that it be repealed at Tuesday night's council meeting.

Beverly pointed out that he introduced the tax ordinance to offset a threatened $119,000 deficit in the city's budget. Instead, Alexandria will wind up its fiscal year with a surplus of more than $500,000, according to budget proposals prepared by City Manager W. Guy Ancell.

Ancell has retained the tax in his proposed 1951 budget and has estimated it will net the city $150,000. Beverly said he believed a sum equivalent to the expected tax yield can be trimmed from the budget through elimination of nonessentials.

Retention of the tax already has drawn fire from the Alexandria Retail Merchants Association, which contends the levy not only has hurt cigarette sales but has affected other forms of business. The merchants have engaged an attorney and will protest the tax at a public budget hearing December 1.

Beverly also said last night he would ask an explanation of a $100,000 increase in welfare department funds over a two-year period. He noted that the proposed

Report Urges City to Add 168 Acres In Parkland

More Playgrounds Also Recommended; Virginia, Maryland Plans Discussed

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Of all the things that make Washington "different" to the visitor, its great open spaces, many small parks and miles of tree-lined streets are perhaps most striking.

Yet as Metropolitan Washington develops in the next 30 years—the period covered in the National Capital Park and planning Commission comprehensive plan issued last week—it may fall behind in its parklike aspect.

The master blueprint, in a section on "open spaces," analyzes recreation and park needs and plans both in the District and in the suburbas area.

8530 Acres the Goal

As now planned, the District eventually will have 8530 acres in parks, parkways and playgrounds—16 percent of it (1325 acres) in recreation units, or 1.3 acres of "active recreation" space per 1000 inhabitants for an estimated 1980 population of 2 million. This, the planners report, means that another 74 acres for supervised recreation needs be acquired and put into use, plus 168 acres more for neighborhood parks.

The problem, of course, is not the total acreage against the total area of the District. Some neighborhods, the planners point out, "already meet or exceed standards while others are still well below even city-wide averages."

There are too few "close-by, active play spaces and neighborhood parks," the comprehensive plan states.

District Job Ner Conclusion

But at least in the District acquisition of land for these open spaces has been going on for many years. Since 1924, the commission has acquired by purchase or gift 2576 acres in all park categories out of the existing total of 8155 acres. In other words, the job in the District is at least heading toward a conclusion except that shifting population will call for adjustments over the years.

The suburban picture is very different; for one reason because there is no limit for what may be 1980's "suburbs" of Washington.

Here is the story:

Virginia—"suburbs in Virginia," says the master plan, "have far too little land set aside to meet the open space needs of the 1980 metropolitan population, both for local service and in large areas for regional use."

Early Action Recommended

The planners urge "early action" by the State and Fairfax County under the Capper-Crampton Act (which advances Federal funds to help buy up area parklands) "to provide for acquisition of land for a key link in the George Washington Memorial parkway before private house building makes it too late."

Further, "a new large-scale regional park is needed to meet needs of the rapidly increasing population of Fairfax and Arlington County."

It was to try to meet this second need that State and local officials met in Alexandria last week. They viewed several suggested sites for a Northern Virginia regional park but kept their locations secret. Nobody appeared to know just where the necessary money would come from, either.

Good Progress in Maryland

Maryland: The commission says that "under a progressive planning program substantial progress has been made in acquiring land for park and recreation use." The planners urge that plans be made now "to meet future needs, where not already provided for, and the necessary areas acquired before private building makes it costly or impossible to provide adequate open spaces."

The national planning commission also urged "using part of the reservation at Greenbelt for a regional park for that section of Prince Georges County, extending Cabin John Creek Park to serve the western part of Montgomery County, and more land at Fort Washington to serve the southern part of Prince Georges County."

Further to the northwest the planners want to make public reservations out of such spots as Sugar Loaf Mountain.

Churches to Aid Christmas Seal Campaign Today

All Washington will observe today as "Christmas Seal Sunday." Jewish synagogues noted the day yesterday.

The Rev. Clarence W. Cranford, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church and president of the Washington Federation of Churches, yesterday declared "Certainly the members of our Protestant churches will want to support the Christmas Seal campaign. Let us all observe Christmas Seal Sunday in our churches, and let us urge every one to buy and use tuberculosis Christmas Seals."

The Catholic churches will take note of the appeal under the leadership of the Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington.

A city-wide test of the diagnostic ability of District physicians has been launched by the District Medical Society.

Specifically, the doctors have been asked to diagnose the disease which proved fatal to a 37-year-old man last July.

Their anonymous verdicts will be correlated and checked against autopsy findings at a special Clinical Pathological Conference, Wednesday night at the District Medical Society, 1718 M st. nw.

1400 Doctors Invited

Clinical Pathological Conferences, or CPCs as they are called in the profession, are routine programs at most medical centers. The scheduled conference, however, is unusual in that more than 1400 physicians have been invited to participate.

For the program, the District doctors have received by mail a complete medical case history of the patient up to his death on July 10. From this information, the same information that was available to the attending doctors, the local doctors are asked to mail in their determinations of the single cause of death.

The various written diagnoses submitted will be tabulated and placed on a blackboard at the meeting, for later comparison with autopsy findings.

North Carolinian to Speak

Guest speaker at the conference will be Dr. George Harrell, professor of medicine at Bowman-Gray School of Medicine, Winston-Salem, N. C., who will discuss the clinical case history.

Dr. Charles Geschickter, professor of pathology at Georgetown University School of Medicine, will present the post-mortem findings. The moderator will be Dr. Harold Jeghers, professor of Medicine at Georgetown.

Dr. Jeghers, who arranged the program, said it was designed to offer all physicians the opportunity of anonymously comparin their final diagnosis with that of the guest discusser and the other diagnoses submitted.

It marks the largest such conference ever attempted in the District, its sponsors said.

Reading Clinic To Emphasize Spelling Aids

Dr. Edward Dolch, professor of education and director of the University of Illinois reading clinic, will speak at the regional institute of the National Association of Remedial Teachers Saturday at Lisner Auditorium, 21st and H sts. nw.

Dr. Dolch will speak on "Techniques for the Improvement of Reading" at 9:45 a. m. and will preside at a symposium on "Spelling and the Classroom Teacher" at 11 a. m.

Phyllis Fenner, author of children's books, will speak on "Children and Books" at a luncheon meeting at 12:45 p. m. at the Roger Smith Hotel, 18th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw.

Public and private school teachers will attend the meeting.

Christ Child Home Gets Ready for Christmas . . .

YOUNG ACTORS—Three "shepherds" (from left, Joe, 10; Billy, 11, and Albert 8), study their parts at the Rockville farm for the story of the Nativity

By Henry Rohland—The Washington Post

OUT FOR A STROLL—Mrs. Margaret H. Gardner, farm administrator, takes an afternoon walk with some of the children. That's Skippy going with them

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

"Of all the birthdays in the year The Christ Child's is the best; Because He loved the children so He came to be their guest."

The childish treble piped out the words in the big, barnlike hall at the Christ Child Farm for Convalescent Children, near Rockville.

The children were practicing their Christmas play. A "shepherd" with a curved stock for his crook stood with his two fellows. Two "angels" in gingham dresses clutches their "lines" and stood in the wings.

Perched on the stairway were other children, faces cupped in hands, watching the rehearsal. Overhead, other feet scampered. Outside, Skippy, the farm dog—of uncertain ancestry—gave a playful bark.

Mrs. Margaret H. Gardner, farm administrator, explained: "They just got their parts last night, and some of them haven't learned their lines yet. But it's really a nice play when we get it finished."

"We three kings of Orient are," sang one of the Wise Men. The other two mouthed the words. "Bearing gifts we umm umm umm umm . . ."

"Remember, Bill," Mrs. Gardner admonished one of the shepherds, "You're carrying a little lamb with you. Hold him close, now."

The Wise Men went to the "wings." One of them slipped quietly away to a smaller boy on the stairs and jacked up his pants. "That's all right," said Mrs. Gardner, "they won't slip off until we've finished here."

After the Wise Men and the shepherds had viewed the Babe in the manger, to which the two angels had directed them, Mrs. Gardner said, "All right, that's as far as we'll go today."

"The next thing," she said, "is the poor boy who comes to make his gift. He's wearing only an old blanket. He says:

"What can I give him, poor as I am? If I were a shepherd I would give him a lamb. If I were a Wise Man I would do my part: But what can I give him? I'll give him my heart.'"

The gay oranges and yellows of the Thanksgiving celebration were still hung in the dining room of the farm as the children filed through in their hats and coats for a few minutes outdoors.

It was brisk in the open air with a little wind sweeping in from the hills. Far off on another hill a huge house was outlined against the sky. Trees bordered the horizon. The children walked happily along the lawn of the farm.

The children are at the quiet country farm until they get well. Some of them are suffering from rheumatic fever, or nephritis. . . . One girl had a fractured skull when she came. They get out into the air unless the weather is bad. And when the sun is out, even the bed cases get out for a little while each day.

The farm has a capacity of 30 children. "But we always have a waiting list," Mrs. Gardner explained. "We're hoping to expand to a capacity of 50."

Most of the children who go to the Christ Child Farm are charity cases. Families of a few can afford to pay, and do. All get the same quiet, nourishing country to look at, the same physical care, the same interest in them as individuals.

Some of the children stay at the farm as much as a year. Some stay only two or three weeks. The average stay is about two months, Mrs. Gardner explained. But while they are there, none of the children seems to think of herself or himself as sick.

The Christ Child Farm is an agency of the Community Chest Federation. If you contribute to the chest campaign, you are helping these children get well. And when the farm's expansion is completed, you will be helping to cut down on the waiting list of other children, who also would like a chance to get well in such a home away from home.

In Memoriam

A tribute of love to the memory of our dear little baby sister, May L. Weaver, whom God called to rest 2 years ago today, November 26, 1948.

The Fairest Lillies are the first to fall,
The sweetest first to fade,
The frailest, youngest of us all,
At peaceful rest is laid.

As some sweet blossoms drop and die,
When blighted by the Frost,
She faded from before our eyes,
And all too soon was lost.

But in God's Garden free from pain,
Where grows his fairest flowers,
We know that we shall meet again,
This little Baby Sister of ours.

LOVING SISTERS.

A booklet of 101 "In Memoriam" tributes suitable for publication is now available without charge. Remembrances for all members of the family and for friends are included. The booklet may be obtained at the front counter in The Post Building, by telephoning your request, or by writing to The Washington Post Classified Advertising Department, Washington 4, D. C.

Miss Long's Fine Voice Wins Praise

By Paul Hume

Prophecy is a dangerous thing and not the customary business of a critic.

But Roberta Long, Washington soprano, who sang a recital last night in the International Student House, gives every promise of becoming one of the finest singers in this country.

Her voice is a naturally beautiful lyric soprano of real proportions. It has an appeal in quality that makes an immediate impression on the listener. No point in her range gives her the slightest trouble. Nor do high notes come forth with any less roundness than the middle or lower part of her voice.

The voice is warm, of rich timbre and capable of great power and fine shading.

Miss Long recently sang in the finals of one of the country's most important vocal contests. The outcome is not yet known. If she is not winner in that, she will make her way through some other channel, for she is too fine a singer and artist not to be heard widely before long.

Her program was drawn from nothing but the best in song literature. American songs, unusual for an opening group, began the evening. They were by Randall Thompson, John Jacob Niles, and Paul Bowles, Debussy, Ravel, Poulenc, Gliero, and Bizet also were heard in the first half of the evening.

Lieder came from Schubert, Schumann, and Korngold. A remarkable group of spirituals closed the evening.

At present Miss Long's voice is ahead of her interpretation. She can make Schubert's Gretchen am Spinnrade a matter of high drama in personal vein. The same is true of her handling of Lia's aria by Debussy. And her own conviction about music and words come to the fore in spirituals in a warm way.

But in much of her French group, and even the American songs at the beginning, she was not the mistress of what she sang. She has not yet made these her own, so that they can emerge from her in an internal way, rather than purely externally.

Her one serious problem is that words, in three languages, are not clear. Consonants are passed over without any definition, and the text is indistinguishable. This must be remedied, and can be by someone with Miss Long's obvious intelligence. For she has tvery attribute of the great singer.

It is unfortunate that an artist first making her way should sing with an accompanist who does not provide rock-like support, whether in Debussy, Schumann or Thompson. Miss Long needs to sing with a pianist who will meet her moods, so that when she establishes a mood, it will be sustained.

Say Stored Plasma Won't Give Jaundice

An easy way to eliminate the danger of jaundice infection in blood plasma transfusions has been reported by a team of Chicago surgeons.

All that need be done, they said, is to store the blood plasma at room temperture for three months to two years.

In that time and clime, reported Dr. J. Carrott Allen, associate professor of surgery at the University of Chicago's medical research center, the jaundice viris apparently dies, though nothing harmful happens to the blood plasma.

Dr. Allen and his associates reported their findings in the current issue of the Joournal of the American Medical Association.

Jaundice following plasma transfusions complicates the recovery of patients, and in an occasional case may be fatal. Estimates of jaundice infections run from 2 to 12 percent of the cases involving plasma transfusions.

Reporting on results of 212 patients given plasma which had been stored at room temperatures, the surgeons said none developed jaundice. In 864 patients similarly treated, only three jaundice cases developed—and these were attributed to the auxiliary use of whole blood, or of plasma preserved by drying.

Four men who won election to the Senate this month filed reports yesterday on campaign contributions and expenditures.

Senator Lehman of New York, who was a candidate of both the Democratic and Liberal Parties, listed no contributions and $16,000 spent by a United Citizens Committee.

Senator Long (D., La.) said his reelection campaign cost nothing and there were no contributions.

$1907 For Clements

Gov. Earle C. Clements (D., Ky.) listed no contributions and expenses of $1907, of which $1315 had been reported previously.

Clements said he turned over all contributions to the Kentucky State Democratic Central Committee. This committee in a separate report listed $8851 contributed and the same amount spent in behalf of a group of Democratic candidates. Before the election the committee listed $9625 in contributions and $9417 expenses.

Representative Richard M. Nixon (R., Calif.) reported $8300 spent and $5805 contributed. In a separate report the United Republican Finance Committee of California, which supported several Republican candidates, listed $70,635 in contributions and $70,602 spent.

Four losing Senate candidates also filed reports. The law requires this report both before and after the election.

William H. (Bill) Alexander, Oklahoma minister who was the Republican candidate for the Senate, reported contributions of $8840 and expenditures, $9846. Alexander's reports showed that the Republican campaign committee supplied $5000 in contributions. He lost to Representative Monroney (D., Okla.).

George R. Marshall, Republican candidate in Nevada, listed $5970 in contributions and $4318 spent. He lost to Senator McCarran (D., Nev.).

John C. Crommelin, jr., retired naval officer who ran as an independent candidate in Alabama, reported contributions of $1619 and expenditures of $2097. He lost to Senator Hill (D., Ala.).

London Times Says Red Peace Release Was 'Calculated'

LONDON, Nov. 25 (AP).—"Calculated indiscretion in Moscow" is how the London Times referred today to the Soviet government's disclosure of recent exchanges between American Delegate John Foster Dulles and Russian Delegate Jacob A. Malik in the United Nations on the terms of a Japanese peace settlement.

"After this breach of confidence," the Times said, "the American State Department published its own version of the exchanges. What was meant to be private is therefore thrown open to the world.

"In the American memorandum there is a striking contrast between territorial proposals and the remaining provisions," said the Times editorially. "Many of the territorial proposals are so definite they reveal the full agreement between the (U. S.) State Department and the Defense Department on what is needed to maintain international security in the Japanese area."

Deal to Boost Aluminum Stock

The Government announced plans yesterday to expand the Nation's aluminum ingot production by 100,000 tons a year.

General Services Administration said it has entered into an agreement with Reynolds Metal Co. to build a new 75,000-ton plant to be ready for production early in 1952. The site has not yet been determined.

In addition, GSA said Reynolds will expand its plant at Jones Mill, Ark., to produce an additional 25,000 tons a year. This expansion is to be completed by early 1951. Under the agreement GSA will purchase the output of the new facilities. Reynolds will get Government financial help, if needed.

The annual 100,000 tons of aluminum which the agreement will make available to the Government for stockpiling and other defense programs is in addition to 79,000 tons which will result from reactivation by the Aluminum Co. of America of idle facilities at Massena, N. Y., and Badin, N. C.

3 Agents Suspended By Revenue Bureau

The Internal Revenue Bureau announced yesterday it has suspended three of its California employes and assigned additional agents to investigate charges that some Bureau personnel were linked with underworld characters.

Revenue Commissioner George J. Schoeneman announced in a statement:

"Ernest M. Schino, Deputy Collector of Revenue at San Francisco, and John B. Williams, of the accounts and collection unit at Los Angeles, have been suspending in connection with the Mountain City Consolidated Copper Co. inquiry.

"William D. Malloy, Deputy Collecter at San Francisco, has been suspended pending completion of an investigation of another case."

The Mountain City copper firm has been under investigation by the Internal Revenue Bureau and more lately by the Senate Crime Investigation Committee, headed by Senator Kefauver, (D.-Tenn.).

Kefauver has described the company as a dummy enterprise set up to help underworld figures with income tax troubles. He said there is evidence of "a definite link between someone in the Federal service and organized crime."

In announcing the bureau employe suspensions, Schoeneman said:

"While the facts so far developed were not conclusive, the maintenance of public confidence in the integrity of the Internal Revenue service required that certain employes be suspended pending completion of the investigation.

"If the investigation impels criminal or other action, such action will be taken promptly. If the investigation discloses no evidence of wrongdoing on the part of the employes, immediate steps will be taken to restore them to duty.

"In connection with this investigation, we are cooperating closely with the Department of Justice."

Schoeneman noted that the charges involve bureau employes alleged to have engaged in "improper transactions with underworld characters in Nevada and California." He said charges "have to do with the sale of stock in the Mountain City Consolidated Copper Company of Nevada."

Senater Kefauver said in stating that there is evidence of a link betwen someone in the Federal service and crime, the committee received "no evidence that the purchase of stock in the company kept (tax fraud) cases from being worked up and recommended for prosection."

Police Get Black Dahlia Confession

Associated Press WIREPHOTO
MRS. CHRISTINE REYNOLDS
... Confesses to Oakland police

OAKLAND, Calif., Nov. 5 (AP).—Police Inspector Eric Gustavson said today an Oakland woman told him she killed and butchered Elizabeth Short, the Los Angeles "Black Dahlia" sex-slaying victim.

The inspector said the admission was made by 34-year-old Christine Reynolds, a stocky blonde.

Mrs. Reynolds, he said, gave the statement "so I can look myself in the face again."

Gustavson told reporters that Mrs. Reynolds declared she stabbed the model and movie extra to death because Miss Short left her for the company of another woman.

The statement, the inspector continued, related that the two had had unnatural relations for three weeks prior to the killing.

Police here talked by telephone with Los Angeles officers and got word that detectives will be sent here at once from the southern city.

Inspector Gustavson said he was "frankly impressed" by the rambling, sometimes incoherent statement of the 1947 slaying, called by Los Angeles police "the most revolting sex crime in our files."

Tighter Law On Kickbacks Is Requested

By The Associated Press

The Justice Department asked Congress yesterday to tighten the law against salary kickbacks in the Government service.

The request was sent to Chairman McCarran (D., Nev.) of the Senate Judiciary Committee and House Speaker Rayburn (D., Tex.).

The letter, signed by Deputy Attorney General Peyton Ford, said the Justice Department "has recently been advised of instances in which employes or prospective employes of the Federal Government have been required to make payments to an employing officer as a condition of obtaining or retaining public office."

The Department is known to have investigated a number of such alleged incidents in the past two years, involving in some cases members of Congress.

The last prosecution on this allegation involved former Representative J. Parnell Thomas (R., N. J.), onetime chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee. Thomas was convicted last year on charges that he collected kickbacks from persons on his congressional office payroll. Fined $10,000 and given a sentence of six to 18 months, he was paroled from the Federal correctional institution at Danbury, Conn., several weeks ago after serving his minimum time.

The Ford letter noted that existing law punishes by one year imprisonment or $1000 fine any solicitation or receipt of money for the purpose of obtaining Federal employment. However, Ford pointed out that the law is silent on the question of payments made for the purpose of keeping a Federal job once it is given.

He submitted a proposed bill covering such offenses and providing the one-year imprisonment or $1000 fine for anyone either making such payments or receiving them.

Former Cohen Aide Submits to FBI for Quiz

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 25 (AP).—Eddie Borden, former fight manager for gambler Mickey Cohen, went voluntarily to the Federal Bureau of Investigation today to discuss reports he was the object of a nationwide FBI search.

It was understood the FBI here had no pickup order for him. Borden previously expressed surprise at reports he was sought by the FBI.

"I haven't done anything and don't know anything about Mickey's income tax," Borden said.

He came here several days ago, registered under his own name at a local hotel and has been talking with fight promoter Lew Raymond, Pete Herman, Eddie Kid Wolfe and other friends in the fistic world. Borden formerly was a writer for Ring Magazine. During the war he was a legal bookmaker in England.

Borden scoffed at reports that Los Angeles police suspect he was kidnaped early this month from Las Vegas by Cohen's henchmen and returned to Los Angeles. Los Angeles officers were reported to have a tip that Cohen wanted Bordon in connection with some bets.

He also denied he had been in business with Cohen but said he had loaned money to Cohen "who is in bad shape financially."

Borden said he did return from Las Vegas to Los Angeles by airplane in company with Eli Lubin, a Cohen associate. Borden insisted he made the trip voluntarily.

"I went back to Los Angeles with nobody forcing me," Borden continued. "I left Los Angeles because I didn't want to be any place where they think it's a crime worse than murder to make a bet or take a bet."

Chicago Police Captain Charged

CHICAGO, Nov. 25 (U.P.).—Chicago's new acting police commissioner Timothy J. O'Connor today filed charges of police rules violation with the Civil Service Commission against a police captain who admitted to Senate Crime Committee investigators that he had piled up a $100,000 fortune.

It was the first action taken against a Chicago police official as a result of the Kefauver Committee hearings here, and it was expected to be followed by others. The captain, Thomas Harrison, formerly was in charge of the Chicago ave. district. He said he would fight the charges with all the legal aid he could muster.

Dewey Names Three For Rail Line Probe

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (U.P.).—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey today named a three-man commission to determine who should operate the bankrupt, wreck-ridden Long Island Railroad and whether it should be integrated with the city's subway system.

The governor appointed former War Secretary Robert P. Patterson, New York Park Commissioner Robert Moses and Supreme Court Referee Charles Lockwood to make a "sweeping report" on the railroad to him within 60 days.

Dewey said the duties of the new Long Island Railroad Commission will be to propose a complete program for permanent operation of the railroad on a "safe, sound and efficient" level.

He said the commission will study present conditions of the road at all levels, determine how to get it out of the bankruptcy courts, and propose State and Federal legislation to rid the railroad of overlapping and conflicting control.

It will also determine whether it would be practical to integrate the "rapid transit facilities of the Long Island Railroad with the New York City Rapid Transit on a self-sustaining basis."

The commission's report will recommend, the Governor said, whether the railroad should, "in the public interest, "be operated by present interests, private interests, a public authority or combined public and private interests.

Earlier today Dewey demanded the resignation of two trustees of the line, David Smucker and Hunter Delatour, and threatened them with court action if their resignations were not in by Monday. The two trustees declined comment on the Governor's demand.

Dewey's action came after long conferences with State, city and Long Island officials over what should be done to prevent further accidents on the Long Island Railroad. A collision of two trains on Thanksgiving eve killed 77 persons and injured 329, bringing the road's casualty toll to 111 dead and more than 500 injured since it went into bankruptcy in March, 1949.

"The railroad is bankrupt financially, in equipment, management and public confidence," Dewey declared. "The miserable conditions of the trains and bad operation are basically the direct result of the demoralized and total bankruptcy of the railroad, physically and spiritually."

The Interstate Commerce Commission opened its investigation of the tragic wreck this morning and heard testimony from railroad employes. The witnesses set the scene of the accident and said that both tracks and signal relays at the wreck scene were and are operating properly.

Commissioner William J. Patterson, who presided over the hearing, said he hoped to complete the hearings as soon as possible but had no idea when that would be.

City Official Cleared of Indiscretion

The Virginia State Tax Commissioner said yesterday that Falls Church Commissioner of Revenue A. Burke Hertz did not break the law when he let a citizen see his master tax file.

The file includes personal-income tax information but Tax Commissioner C. H. Morissett said the citizen—Mrs. Merrill Lee Chanel—was one of Hertz's employes and therefore entitled to see the file.

However Falls Church Mayor Albert M. Orme declared last night that Hertz "did not tell the City Council when he was confronted with the charges that Mrs. Chanel was his employe."

Mayor Orme said he was "rather surprised" to learn that the commissioner of revenue could hire anyone for any amount, and permit that person to go through the personal files.

The Virginia Code provides that the circuit court and any citizen has the rightto initiate an investigation.

On November 17 Hertz said he had permitted Mrs. Chanel access to his file September 21. She "wasn't interested in the income tax data," he said.

"All we wanted were the names of people who had paid their capitation (poll) taxes," he added, for "a personal project."

The "personal project" would reveal the names of eligible voters in the hotly disputed recent referendum on whether the city attorney should be appointed or elected. The council meets Monday at the city hall but the mayor said he did not know what action it would take.

Washington Planning Exhibit to Continue

The National Capital Park and Planning Commission's exhibit on Washington's plans for the future will remain on public view at Corcoran Art Gallery through December 10.

This was announced yesterday by John Nolen, jr., planning director for the commission. The show originally was due to close today.

BEAR BRUNT OF STORM—Cities underlined on the map suffered the most from snow, rain and wind storms that struck the eastern third of the Nation yesterday and last night cities buried under the mountainous snowdrifts: Trolley, taxi, bus, auto and airline transportation came to a virtual halt. Trains were several hours late. Some big department stores didn't try to open. Hundreds of workers tramped to work on foot, but thousands of others stayed home. Many newspapers couldn't distribute their Saturday afternoon editions.

Bitter cold and blustery snow spread into the deep South. Forecasters said temperatures of 28 to 32 degrees probably would pinch Miami and other Southern Florida points by early today. Mitchell, N. C., highest point east of the Mississippi River, had a reading of 1 below zero.

Much of the Midwest shivered in a subzero cold wave for the third day in a row.

The East Coast storm washed away some seaside homes, covered airports, inundated railway lines and poured into some sections of New York City's subway.

Civilian Defense Alerted

The howling winds ripped off roofs, flattened trees, snapped power lines and knocked down advertising signs.

For the first time since the war, a New York Mayor alerted civilian defense forces. Mayor Vincent R. Impellitteri urged them to aid police and firemen in rescue and emergency repair work. He asked all other civilians to stay off the streets.

Nearby Newark and Jersey City, N. J., proclaimed states of emergency because of storm danger.

The rain laden winds, howling at 60 miles an hour throughout the storm area, reached a gust of 94 at New York City's Idlewild Airport. A velocity of 105 miles an hour was recorded on the weather station atop Bear Mountain, 40 miles up the Hudson River from New York.

Floods and fallen wires left three quarters of a million homes in the greater New York-Northern New Jersey area without electricity. Power failure forced at least seven radio stations in New York and New Jersey off the air. A five story building collapsed near the polo grounds in Upper Manhattan.

Utilities Deranged

Whole towns in the gale-lashed area were without telephone service and electricity. Damage to mains and pumping esuipment left some places without drinking water. More than 30,000 telephones were out of commissions in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

Trains arriving in New York were two to seven hours late. La Guardia Airport was so flooded it looked like a lake. Some 250 scheduled domestic airline flights were canceled.

The Norwegian Line Motorship Lyngenfjord caught fire off Long Island. The Coast Guard later reported the fire under control. A 38-foot Coast Guard picket boat sank off Perth Amboy, N. J. Another was dashed aground, but no lives were lost. Several barges were reported breaking up on the rocks off Ricker's Island in New York's East River and thousands of small pleasure craft were torn loose from their moorings.

Homeless in Armories

Thousands of persons were left homeless in flooded shore areas.

Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll of New Jersey ordered National Guard armories thrown open to the homeless. The Red Cross opened shelters in many communities in New York.

New York's storm began slackening off last night.

In New Jersey, waves along the coast tossed 30-foot timber pilings into the air and buckled resort sidewalks.

The New York Weather Bureau said gusts of 70 to 80 miles an hour would continue until late last night.

Some 3000 telephones were knocked out of service by the high winds in New Jersey.

The heaviest snowfall recorded was at Lumberport, a small town about 12 miles north of Clarksburg W. Va. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad said the town had a 42-inch fall.

All of Michigan was stormbound. The snow ranged from three inches in Detroit to more than a foot in the Upper Peninsula.

The snow tapered off late yesterday in Pennsylvania, but forecasters said snow flurries might follow. The storm halted crime and finance. For the first time in 14 years there was no trading at the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange. Police had no reports of crimes for a 14-hour period.

Wooster College Extends Holiday

WOOSTER, Ohio, Nov. 25 (AP).—President Howard Lowry of Wooster College announced today that the school's Thanksgiving vacation will end Tuesday, instead of Monday, because of the weather conditions.

Those delayed beyond Tuesday because of the weather will be excused, Lowry said. Ordinarily, students late in returning to school are fined.

President Lowry said his message is directed also to large groups of Wooster College students living in Buffalo, Chicago, Pittsburgh, New York City, Washington, D. C., Rochester, N. Y., and Trenton, N. J.

Whisky Bottom Rd. In Laurel Becomes Patuxent Drive

LAUREL, Md., Nov. 25 (AP). Whisky Bottom Road has been widened, resurfaced—and dignified.

Refer to it now, please, as Patuxent Drive.

This fashionable-sounding handle came about after new residents raised their noses at the name of Whisky Bottom.

After all, the three-mile stretch in Howard County had once been known as All Saints' Road. And, said the residents, it was time for another change.

So it's now Patuxent Drive—by authority of the county commissioners.

Exactly how the road came to be called Whisky Bottom isn't known for sure, but at one time it was said to have been a rendezvous for bootleggers. And, in the woods nearby, stills once reportedly operated.

he road extends from the Laurel race track to Scraggsville and roughly parallels the upper reaches of the Patuxent River. So Patuxent Drive was a natural.

Ottawa Stores Burn

OTTAWA, Nov. 25 (AP).—A three-alarm fire early today swept through a seven-story downtown brick business building, destroying four stores and several offices. Damage was estimated at $200,000.

grees. Snow flurries are expected, along with cloudy skies.

The early morning low may rise to 20 degrees early Monday, forecasters believed last night.

But with all the weather troubles of the District and vicinity, the Weather Bureau said Washington could write itself off as "lucky"—compared to Maryland and Virginia.

Heavy snow blanketed all southwestern Virginia — some areas had as much as 16 inches. State Highway Department crews in most of Virginia worked 24-hour shifts. Firemen blamed lightning for a $10,000 blaze on a farm near Harrisonburg.

Maryland's troubles varied from section to section—floods, gales, heavy snow, sleet, bitter cold, pouring rain.

Transportation was crippl[illegible] thousands of telephones were put out of service, electric power failed in a dozen areas, homes were unroofed, trees downed and small boats piled up.

A four-engined seaplane was adrift for several hours in Baltimore's Harbor Airport.

At Salisbury, a heavy wind tore off an airport hangar door, flipped a light plane outside. The plane —a new one—was damaged beyond repair.

Ocean City suffered high tides and breakers. Gales tore the Eastern Shore. The village of Keedysville reported its worst flood since 1936. Four buses were caught temporarily between Hancock and Cumberland.

Garrett and Allegany Counties had near-zero weather, snow ranging from 10 to 15 inches.

Martinsburg, W. Va., had a flood, and two men made capital out of it:

The swollen Tuscarora Creek washed away 20,000 bushels of apples piled alongside a processing plant. Police said the two men went downstream, seined out some of the apples and started peddling them at 25 cents a bushel.

So, compared to all this, the District had it easy.

Gusts of wind were reported up to 52 miles an hour, but the prevailing average in the early morning was from 35 to 40.

The Weather Bureau's precipitation reading showed that 1.77 inches of moisture had fallen between midnight and 7:30 p. m. The 1.5 inches of snow accounted for only .16 inches of this moisture total, but it was enough for police to receive their first call of the year "to disperse youngsters throwing snowballs."

There were at least three calls of wind-downed trees, many of fallen limbs. A plate-glass window at 5th and D sts. nw. was blown in. Two reports were made of fallen wires.

A freak washout tied up Capital Transit Company's Cabin John street car line from 5:57 a. m. to 2:05 p. m. During most of this time, Capital Transit ran busses from 36th and Prospect sts. nw. to Cabin John.

What apparently happened was that water from the Georgetown reservoir overflowed into a 36-inch drainpipe. In the 4600 block of Canal rd. nw., the pipe breaks off for six feet. So the water gushed out there, washing away tons of earth and the crossties of the car line. Mud was piled up four feet.

One thing the District can call itself lucky for is that an unusually strong low-pressure area prevented the storm from reaching Washington late Friday night, as predicted.

The low area moved into Virginia, with the result that the District got what most of the East, Midwest and South experienced, a day later.

Tides Halt Ferries In Chesapeake Bay

cal," a spokesman said. Speed of its elevators was cut 75 percent to prevent the gales shooting down the shafts from dangerously swinging the cabs and cables.

As a result, the usual trip from ground floor to observation deck took almost three minutes.

As night came and the millions of lights shone blearily across the vast city, the storm passed to the west and winds dropped to 18 miles an hour. The temperature began dipping after 7 p. m. and was expected to slide down into the 20's tonight, with snow forecast early tomorrow.

New York's thousands of Civilian Defense workers, ordered to stand by during the storm for emergency duty, were relieved of the alert by Mayor Vincent R. Impellitteri after the crisis passed

A skylight covering several galleries in the Metropolitan Museum of Art was broken by the storm and attendants had to rush valuable paintings from the galleries to safety.

Elsewhere, water from New York Harbor flooded the Erie Railroad station at Jersey City, forcing 75 marooned passengers and railroad employes to climb atop waiting room benches for safety. White caps broke at their feet and fish were swimming in the room.

A balcony fell from a building in Lower Manhattan, killing a man. A pedestrian was killed as he chased a hat up a windswept street in The Bronx. A motorist was electrocuted when a power line fell on his automobile. Two persons were killed in New Jersey when a tree fell on their car.

An unoccupied five-story building across the street from the Polo Grounds was blown down, crashing in a heap of rubble.

The wind tore a 20-foot metal strip of coping from the roof of a six-story tenement in lower Manhattan. Police evacuated eight families from the two top floors.

Russian Weed Perils Western Livestock

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 25 (U.P.).—A fast-spreading poisonous Russian weed is "threatening the very existence" of the 600 billion dollar livestock industry of seven Western States.

Livestock men and Government officials said the Nation's supply of beef, wool and lamb will be "sharply curtailed" unless the weed — called halogeton — is brought under control promptly.

Halogeton, a hardy "invader" that thrives on land too dry for most vegetation, already has been located in varying degrees in Utah, Oregon, Nevada, Montana, Idaho, Colorado and California.

Extension Feared

Baffled experts warned that other States, including Texas and its vast rangelands, also might soon find that the poisonous weed has crossed their borders.

"We have to be prepared to halt halogeton's damage to the livestock industry or liquidate the industry," warned Tracy R. Welling, chairman of the Utah Agricultural Commission.

"It's a threat to America's sheep and cattle comparable to the hoof and mouth disease epidemic that's raised so much havoc in Mexico," Welling added.

Specialists in noxious weeds say that America's first halogeton seeds probably hitched a ride from their native lands northeast of Russia's Caspian Sea in a shipment of hardy grass seeds imported to replenish growth on Western rangelands.

First Appeared in 1935

The first recorded appearance of the weed was near the railroad right-of-way in eastern Nevada, near the livestock center of Wells, in 1935. Sheep and cattle eating halogeton in the fall particularly became sick and scores died as long as 14 years ago in Nevada.

The plant closely resembles its botanical cousin, Russian thistle or tumbleweed, in appearance except for a hairlike growth at the tip of the leaves. It's green in early life, blooms attractively in the summer, and dries crisply in the fall.

Eight to 24 ounces of the dried weed are enough to kill an average 120-pound sheep because of an oxalic acid content averaging 20 percent.

The heaviest growth is now in northern Nevada, southern Idaho and western Utah. The other four States have only small spots of infestation.

U. S. Chamber of Commerce Asks for 'Unrestricted' Trade

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States yesterday called on free nations to increase their production of critical defense materials, and urged "unrestricted" trade to build up the economic backbone of non-Communist countries.

At the same time it said some controls are essential to make sure vital defense goods "do not get into the hands of potential aggressors.

The Chamber made public a statement by its board of directors, based on a report by its committee on foreign commerce headed by Richard L. Bowditch of Boston.

Its chief point was that shortages of materials in the United States should not be met by cutting down United States exports, and that any controls which block world trade should be handled "intelligently" and removed as soon as possible.

The chamber in the past has supported the Administration's reciprocal trade program, which faces a stiff fight from the strengthened Republican forces in the next Congress when it comes up for renewal. Yesterday's statement indicated continued chamber support for the general aims of the program.

Calling economic strength "essential to military preparedness," it said this strength "is dependent to a great extent on multilateral, unrestricted trading among free nations."

It said this country needs foreign goods for its rearmament program, and should make "every effort" to ship goods abroad "in order that we may receive those imports so necessary for our own economy and as incentive for increased production."

"In meeting restrictions placed on our domestic economy because of the mobilization program, domestic deficits should not be filled by restricting the flow of goods that must be used as exchange for goods from abroad necessary to survival," it said.

Army Radio System To Accept Civilians

The Army announced yesterday it will accept civilian members in its military amateur radio system which was set up in 1948.

Previously the program was open only to amateur radio operators with some military affiliation, including civilian components. Civilians must be at least 21, hold valid licenses, and agree to operate their stations according to program regulations.

Production Still Holding At High Rate

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (AP).—The National Association of Purchasing Agents reported today a widening of the gap between increasing production and decreasing buying. November is the third consecutive month for that trend.

The report on the composite opinion of purchasing agents said: "Production is holding at high rates and still increasing where materials and manpower are available. For the third consecutive month, our survey shows a widening gap between increasing production and decreasing order trend.

"This may represent a decline in scare-selling or the increasing grip of controls. Military business is creeping up but its overall effect is spotty.

"National Production Authority limitation orders issued this month, covering several metals, are not as drastic as might have been expected but, when added to Government stockpile demands and special allocation directives, they will require a heavy cutback in materials for civilian use.

"Prices edged up in November, machine tools being the leader in the movement. Prices are expected to level off, unless wage rates take another jump. Inventories are drifting down. Employment is high, and the trend is to a longer work week."

as potentially much more dangerous than the last eruptions in December, 1949. The lava flow, moving in two streams, is pouring down the Valle del Leone (Valley of the Lion) and the Valle del Bove (Valley of the Cow). These slopes lead eastward to the coast in the area of the towns of Giarre and Riposto, some 10 miles from the crater.

The nearest village in the direction of the flow is Fornazza, midway between the peak and the coast.

Etna has been relatively quiet since a four-day eruption last December. Fears have been expressed since then that the quiet was only temporary and that the next eruption might be more severe.

The new outbreak of the volcano was accompanied by severe earth shocks felt over much of eastern Sicily. Catania, a city of nearly 250,000 inhabitants, was shaken badly.

Etna has erupted some 80 times in recorded history and many of these times brought staggering death tolls and vast destruction.

Earth shocks preceded the eruption last December and for a time the little village of Maletto was threatened, but the lava flow slowed down several miles from the village. The flow of lava continued slowly for two days, but except for a few farms, the population suffered little from it.

Nicaraguan Volcano Shows No Letup on 5th Day

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Nov. 25 (U.P.).—Cerro Negro volcano was spewing destruction today, the fifth day of its current violent eruption.

Reports from Leon said a constant rain of coarse sand gradually was covering that virtually abandoned city and that there were grave fears many buildings may collapse under the weight of the sand.

Destruction of crops and cattle herds throughout the surrounding agricultural area continued, the report said. There was no indication of a letup in the volcano's activity, which, if anything, was still increasing in violence.

President E. Garrett Barlow of the church's Inglewood, Calif., stake presented the gold and diamond medallions last night at a Shrine Auditorium ceremony attended by 70,000 Mormons. Herbert Hoover, jr., of Pasadena, Calif., accepted the award for his father and Dr. Harvey Mudd, of Los Angeles civic leader, received the honors for Baruch.

2000 Members of Eastern Star Attend Reception as Climax of Three-Day Meeting

The Washington Post

Two thousand members of the Order of Eastern Star attended a reception by the General Grand Chapter at the International Eastern Star Temple last night. The event climaxed a three-day meeting in celebration of the Centennial of the Writing of the Ritual.

Mrs. Mamie Lander, Past Most Worthy Grand Matron, who is now Right Worthy Grand Secretary, was in the receiving line with past and present General Grand Chapter officers. The reception was under Mrs. Lander's direction.

The International Eastern Star Temple, where the reception took place, is the former Perry Belmont mansion on New Hampshire ave. The receiving line was headed by Mrs. Abbie Hanson, Most Worthy Grand Matron; Judge Franklin W. L. Miles, Most Worthy Grand Patron; Mrs. Ray K. Wonderly, Worthy Grand Matron, District of Columbia Grand Chapter, and Raymond L. Babcock, Worthy Grand Patron.

Oother events yesterday included a luncheon in the Washington Hotel for approximately 650 members. The luncheon was under the auspices of the Grand Chapter of the Wistrict of Columbia. Mrs. Pearl Watt Gibb was Chairman of Hospitality.

Earlier in the day, a motorcade of 400 cars volunteered by D. C. members stopped at Mount Vernon, where wreaths were placed at George Washington's tomb, and Arlington Cemetery, where they were placed on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

A pageant for members only, produced by the Grand Chapter of Indiana, in Lisner Auditorium, was the highlight of Friday's opening day events. This was preceded by a Conference of Worthy Grand Matrons and Associate Grand Matrons in the International Eastern Star Temple.

British Royal Marines To Honor U. S. Corps

LONDON, Nov. 25 (U.P.).—Britain's tough Royal Marines, who know a brother-in-arms when they see one, will present one of their most treasured battle trophies to the United States Marine Corps on Tuesday.

The "Canton Bell," which was captured in Canton when the First Battalion, Royal Marines, took the Chinese city in 1857, will be turned over to Col. E. S. Piper, USMC, commanding officer of the London detachment of the American Leathernecks, at a ceremony at the Royal Marine barracks in Chatham. The bell wil go to the Marine Corps museum at Quantico, Va.

Doomed Baby Offered For Study of Disease

ROSEBURG, Oreg., Nov. 25 (U.P.). An anguished mother and father gave up their 2-month-old daughter as a "guinea pig" to science today because she is believed doomed to die of a dread disease.

Mrs. Edgar Davis, 18, said she was giving up her baby, Patricia, in the hope that by experimenting, doctors may learn how "to save some other little kid." Two hospitals abandoned hope after treating the child for fibrocystic disease of the pancreas, which makes digestion difficult and leads to chronic lung infection.

War Isn't Inevitable, Ministers Told

A Washington conference on "Christian Alternatives to War" was told yesterday that war is not inevitable, that the minds and wills of individuals still can determine in the course of nations.

A. J. Muste, national executive secretary, Fellowship of Reconciliation, was the speaker at the final session of the two-day meeting of Washington's peace organizations and pacifist religious groups.

Christianity carried to its logical conclusions can lead only to peace, Muste said.

The conference at Friends Meeting House, 2111 Florida ave. nw., was one of twelve scheduled in major cities following a national conference last spring in Detroit on The Church and War.

On Friday, Dr. Paul E. Scherer, of Union Theological Seminary, New York City, told the group that pacifism is a valid, appropriate expression of the Christian message.

"Love is the strongest motivating force in religion and its use can be effective in helping to solve the world's problems today," he said.

At the close of the meeting the group moved to encourage the formation of a fellowship of the District's Protestant ministers holding the Christian pacifist point of view.

A commitment service led by the Rev. Robert F. Weiskotten, national director of the Church Peace Mission, closed the conference.

Young Showmen Win Top Prizes at Livestock Show

CHICAGO, Nov. 25 (AP).—Young showmen from Illinois, Oklahoma and Wisconsin paraded off the tanbark with top prizes today in junior feeding competition at the International Livestock Exposition.

The exposition, the fifty-first annual and tops in farm world competition, opened an eight-day run. An array of animals, meats, grains, and wool, valued in excess of five million dollars, is shown under a single roof. There are 11,000 cattle, sheep, swine and horses.

Ceylon Music Culled by Native; To Give Concert December 8

The Washington Post

WILL SING HERE—Devar Surya Sena, who gave up the law for music, poses with his "rebec," and his wife, Nelun Devi, with an Oriental harp, the only one of its kind in existence

See my darling's garden in the bright sunshine,
Two watermelons growing on a vine;
But some thorny branches round the melons twine,
So I can not pluck them for you baby mine.

A Cambridge-educated lawyer who gave up his legal career to help bridge the gap between East and West through music soon will be singing this and other songs of Ceylon and the Orient in Washington.

With his wife playing the only Oriental harp of its kind in the world as he played stringed "rebec," Devar Surya Sena yesterday gave a press preview of the music of his native Ceylon.

The couple will give a concert at 8:30 p. m. December 8, in the Coolidge Auditorium of the Library of Congress, before an invitation audience.

Of Strength and Loveliness

Much of the music of Ceylon turned out to be a thing of both strength and of delicate loveliness, with a definite link to the Wesern heart . . . not at all "strange" or "unrecogniziable," as one might have expected.

This bore out the contention of Devar Surya Sena and his wife, Nelum Diva, that the music of Ceylon and India is really close to the western world. And, he pointed out with a smile:

'We have the diatonic scale, as you do. And we discovered it a thousand years before you did."

Some of the music is indeed strange, though fascinatingly so, to the western ear—such as that played on the Sinhalese rabana (drums) and the talam-pata, minute hand cymbals.

Can Be Appreciated

But much of the music could be appreciated instantly. A factor in this appreciation is the origin of the music the two Sinhalese play.

It is the folk-music of Ceylon, and none of it had been collected before Devar Surya Sena, back from a law education at Cambridge University in England, decided to gather this music before it was forgotten. It was a promising legal career he surrendered, but it was replaced by an important substitute.

All over Ceylon and to other oriental countries he went, collecting the unrecorded songs the people sing. Songs like the lullaby "Doyi-Doyi" quoted above; songs of the boatmen of Ceylon.

In the oriental harp he designed an ideal instrument to bring the songs alive. The harp is based on an instrument Devar Surya Sena saw in a Persian painting of the Middle Ages. It gives out sounds of finest tendernes and seems balanced by the tum-tum of the rabana drums.

Devar Surya Sena and his wife have performed in Lausanne, Paris, Vienna, London and New York—and with great success, to read their reviews. The coming performance will be their first Washington concert.

Neither Snow Nor Ice Keeps Fred Gichner's Friends Away

The Washington Post

HAPPY BIRTHDAY—Fred S. Gichner (center) poses with Mrs. Gichner and Harry Reynolds, superintendent of the wire shop of the Gichner Iron Works, during birthday party last night

Neither snow nor ice could keep Fred S. Gichner's friends away.

More than a thousand of them came to the eightieth birthday party for one of the city's leading ironworkers, held last night in the Mayflower Hotel.

Affable Fred Gichner, who wanted nothing more for his birthday than "to get all my friends together," stood beside Mrs. Gichner, his four sons and daughter, and gave hundreds the warm handshake that carries behind it almost 70 years of shaping iron into graceful works of art.

Almost all the 100 employes of the Fred S. Gichner Iron Works at 24th and M sts. nw. were present.

There were the young apprentices, starting now as Gichner did in Vienna in the 1880's, and the old hands who could look back to Gichner's first plant at 12th and E sts. nw., opened in 1898 by the young immigrant.

Washington was kind to young, hard-working Fred Gichner. His knowledge of the metal arts soon brought him fame and prestige.

The Gichner name became synonomous with the fine hand-wrought trellises and grills and railings that still adorn some of Washington's embassies. But Gichner did not forget his people in Vienna.

Many of them shared in the profits of the iron works. And American charities soon found a generous friend in Fred Gichner. His employes can tell of the Christmas bonuses, the little kindnesses that have endeared them to the "boss."

Harry Reynolds, superintendent of the wire shop of the iron works, could understand Gichner's happiness at the party. His life had been close to that of three iron works since he started working there 43 years ago as an apprentice.

He and his wife, Mrs. Alice Reynolds, celebrated their thirtieth wedding anniversary at Gichner's party last night. They could remember World War, I, when Gichner adapted his knowledge of design and iron to the needs of war.

Then came World War II which brought the Gichner Iron Works the first Army-Navy E award given a Washington industry. All the skill and art of Gichner's five decades in iron work went into war effort.

Government officials who had needed the special war equipment did not forget. Many of them, too, were present last night to wish Fred happy returns.

Fred Gichner took the strenuous evening of hand-shaking and happy conversation without tiring. Everyone else had been running around all day getting ready. Not Fred Gichner.

All afternoon he had slept the sleep of a man at peace with the world.

Soviet Charges British Hold 3 Russian Children

BERLIN, Nov. 25 (U.P.).—Russian authorities have accused the British of holding three Russian children and subjecting them to "shocking treatment," the Soviet ADN news agency said tonight.

The dispatch said the British had refused to return the children despite official requests. It said the children were carried into Germany by the Nazis in 1944.

The news agency said the British "confirmed" that the three children were located in the British zone in 1947 and that their names were Guti and Wii Zerin and Jurja Ossolinsch. It said the British refused repeated Soviet requests for their return and finally "removed them to an overseas country."

Austrian Union Group Expels 9 Red Editors

VIENNA, Nov. 25 (AP). — The Austrian Trade Union Federation expelled the chief editors of nine Communist newspapers tonight for failure to sign a loyalty declaration. The declaration contained a paragraph saying those who did not sign thereby indicated their intention to get out of the union.

In addition, however, federation spokesmen said "the way in which these papers reported the recent Communist attempt at a general strike was detrimental to the federation."

On Golden Wedding, Couple Recalls Fire

Mr. and Mrs. William L. Strickler on golden anniversary

Twenty-seven years ago Mr. and Mrs. William L. Strickler got about the most unpleasant welcome possible from Metropolitan Washington.

Shortly after their arrival in 1923, their new home at 985 Frederick st., Arlington, burned to the ground. Discouraged but determined, they stayed on, and soon built a second home on the charred rubble.

Yesterday, at their golden wedding anniversary celebration, they could look back and smile about it. They could tell their seven children—and 13 grandchildren and one great-grandchild — that the 50 years had also been filled with pleasures.

More than 100 persons gathered at their home to help the Stricklers celebrate.

Baskets of chrysanthemums and roses and piles of anniversary gifts made it appear that Christmas had come early.

The Stricklers were married on Thanksgiving Day, November 28, 1900, in Fishersville, Va. The 50th anniversary celebration was four days early, so Lieut. Col. Richard D. Strickler, plans and training officer at Camp Lejeune, N.C., could join the party. Relatives came from as far as New York. Six of the Strickler's seven children are married.

New U. S. Hiring System Sought By Hoover Group

Congress was urged yesterday to pass a bill to reform the Government's hiring system.

The plea came from the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report, a group of private individuals seeking enactment of Federal reforms proposed by the Hoover Commission on Government Reorganization.

Dr. Robert L. Johnson, committee chairman, said improved personnel methods will help the Government "find square pegs for square holes" and combat inflation by wiping out wasteful management.

One of the chief aims of the proposed measure is to let Government agencies hire the men they want directly instead of having to go through the Civil Service Commission.

The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee has approved such a measure, and a similar bill has been studied by the parallel Senate committee.

Women Voters Will Discuss New Md. Bills

The State legislative conference of the Maryland League of Women Voters will be held at 10:30 a. m. Wednesday in Carvel Hall, Annapolis, Md.

League members and outside speakers will discuss prospective legislation in the 1951 session of the Maryland General Assembly which convenes January 3.

Proposed provisions for the State Constitutional Convention will be discussed, although it is not certain that such a convention will be called. Although 250,000 voters who voted favorably in the recent election are a majority of those who voted on the referendum, there were 600,000 votes cast.

Previously a convention was refused by the Legislature because those in the affirmative were not in the majority of those voting. The General Assembly will have to determine whether to call the convention.

Revision of State tax procedure and administration, the Department of Public Welfare, adoption laws, absentee voting and the library bill are among the topics to be considered.

Dr. Elwyn Mauck, director of the Fiscal Research Bureau, will attend the convention to participate in various discussions, according to Mrs. Elizabeth Rohr, legislative chairman of the State league.

Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties will send large delegations to the conference.

Mail Delivery Boost Ordered For Christmas

By The Associated Press

Despite the 1950 postal service cutbacks, the postman will ring twice, or oftener, during the Christmas season.

Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson said yesterday there would be "ample" daily mail deliveries in both residential and business areas.

But he made it clear that when the holidays are over, the service curtailments which he ordered last April, including once-a-day deliveries in city residential sections, again will be in effect.

According to Donaldson, the idea of the service cuts originated in Congress, which refused to give him the appropriation he estimated to be needed for the current year's operations. And he indicated it will take an act of Congress to put the service back where it was.

Holiday Service as Usual

For the Christmas season, when the economy plan will be temporarily shelved, the department is already making a start on the hiring of some 300,000 extra temporary employes to assist the regular staff of about 500,000.

"The holiday mail rush," said the Postmaster General, "will be handled as it has been handled every year. There will be plenty of late window service; parcel post windows will be kept open on holidays; and we will make as many door deliveries every day as it takes to keep the big volume moving promptly."

When the House Appropriations Committee last March directed Donaldson to take "every step possible to save money," and specifically called for fewer home deliveries, the committee said it anticipated "some complaints."

The committe was right. There were howls on Congress, from the postal workers unions, and from segments of the general public.

Inconvenience Denied

Donaldson said he believes the protests have largely died down and although he opposed the curtailments in the first place, he does not believe they have seriously inconvenienced anyone.

"For every complaint I received," he said, "I got 100 commendatory letters for the effort to save the Government some money.

"Congress is the board of directors of the postal business. I manage the business as the board directs.

"If I were both the board and the manager of the business, I would raise the rates on all low-revenue mail to provide additional services as the need arises."

$70 Million Difference

The difference between what Donaldson asked and what he got for 1951 fiscal year postal expenses was about $70,000,000. The service changes were designed to reduce the cost of operations by that amount and Donaldson believes the end of the year will show this goal reached. He estimates he is now saving $28,000,000 a year on the one-a-day home deliveries alone.

Since the cutbacks started, the department has dropped about 30,000 temporary and part-time employes from its payroll. It has also had during the past year about 3000 retirements of permanent employes for which permanent replacements have not been made, "pending study."

Donaldson said there is no factor of "pressure" on Congress in what he has done.

"I am carying out orders," he asserted. "However, I still believe that balanced postal rates will do most toward solving the postal deficit problem."

He emphasized that he will continue to ask Congress for higher rates on virtually everything except the three-cent letter.

VFW Asks Truman To Modify Vets' Credit Controls

The Veterans of Foreign Wars yesterday called for modification of credit controls so veterans can buy homes costing up to $10,000 without any down payment.

Under anti-inflation curbs imposed recently by the Government, down payments of 13 percent are required.

VFW Legislative Director Omar B. Ketchum said the organization has adopted a "priority resolution" urging President Truman to ease the restrictions immediately. He said "very few" veterans can afford the down payment.

"We recognize that it may be necessary to curtail home construction in the next year to conserve critical materials for defense production," he said. "However, the VFW believes that the limited materials available should be channeled into the low and medium priced housing market and that veterans should have preference in the purchase of these homes."

Lame Duck Session Will Mostly Hatch Goose-Eggs

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

THERE'S a quite familiar limp about tomorrow's homecoming of the Eighty-first Congress that bodes no good for the program laid out for it.

Democrats, clipped too close for comfort by November's selective voting, have lost much of their pre-election verve for the short session job, and practically all of their drive.

True, they will have (until January) the same party majorities in both Houses that pushed an impressive chunk of Truman measures through the Eighty-first Congress in its first 20 months. But they're still singing those post-election blues. If they had nothing to be thankful for Thursday, it's because they were more crippled by November's spot-lighting than their bigwigs admit.

Even if, through some miracle, the Democrats again grab the ball, they still lack the time to reach the goal line.

It usually takes a fortnight to get a Congress under way. This session will close before it really gets going. It's maximum duration is three to four weeks.

The Republicans, always cool to the November 27 return bout, are disposed to sit on their hands. Fact is, they can't cash in fully on their newly elected strength until January, when the Eighty-second Congress convenes. They will try to delay most major decisions 'til then.

Just now, the Republicans are far more interested in 1952 Presidential horizons than in any 1950-51 landmarks.

The Whipping Boy

CLOAKROOM gossips say they have only one major short session project—a head-hunting expedition. Between now and Christmas they'll be gunning for their favorite whipping boy—Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

As a sideline, they'll be flirting more openly than ever with Southern Democrats across the aisle. The Republicans need a coalition in the Eighty-second Congress really to run it. When they're not head-hunting, there'll be some heavy courting going on.

As a last resort, a dying session provides a dead-end trap for any really controversial measure. It's a natural for filibusters. All any determined minority has to do is keep right on talking 'til the session ends.

So that "lame duck" Congress convening tomorrow may be limping in more than the traditional sense. That limp may put a crimp in nearly all pending domestic measures. Only overriding defense and foreign policy bills can be sure of preferred treatment, and all of these may not emerge unscathed.

A 'Re-Examination'

HERE'S the outlook for key measures coming up:

Multibillion Defense Appropriations—Sure of approval but only after a foretaste of the kind of "re-examination" Republicans plan in the January session ahead.

Yugoslavian Aid—Likely to be approved in some form, but look out for opposition from the aid-to-Chiang Kai-shek and aid-to-Franco blocs. They want Nationalist China and Spain aided first.

Rent Control Extension—Only a long-shot possibility. If the present law is extended at all, it will be only on a 30-to-60-day basis.

Taxes—A watered down excess profits tax, possibly linked with a mild increase in regular corporate rates, will come out of the Ways and Means Committee, but it will be a far cry from the Administration's 75 percent profits crackdown. Such a compromise bill has a good chance to pass the House and even clear the Senate Finance Committee. But time should run out before it passes the Senate.

Hawaii and Alaska Statehood—Both bills have cleared the House and need only to pass the Senate to add two new stars to the American Flag. But neither bill is likely to clear that long, last mile. Coalition opponents stand ready to talk them to death.

Anti-Slot Machine Bill—A one-man filibuster by Senator George W. Malone (R., Nev.) blocked approval of this conference report last session. Unless Malone can win more Republican support than he now has, this bill at least will pass.

Railway Labor Act Amendments—The Senate made this its unfinished business when it closed shop in September, and it will be the first bill up in the short session Senate. But labor itself is divided on the

FDR: From Munich Into World War II

THIS IS the fifteenth of 31 installments of letters selected from the two-volume work, "F. D. R.: His Personal Letters."

It covers a period of more than two years, from Munich, in September, 1938, through the fall of France in June, 1940, and the Japanese invasion of French Indo-China the following September.

These letters trace Hitler's successive bloodless conquests, climaxed by his invasion of the Low Countries. They cover the signing of the Nazi-Soviet non-aggression pact and the subsequent invasion of Poland. They touch on Roosevelt's unsuccessful attempt to "purge" leading foes of his "court-packing" plan in the 1938 primaries, and on his long fight to have Congress lift the arms embargo.

They also show the development of the destroyers-for-bases deal with Britain, and the first faint glimmer of what was to be Lend-Lease. They throw light on his appointment of Myron Taylor as his representative at the Vatican. And they reveal his plans for troop train movements across the Potomac if the railway bridge here were bombed.

F.D.R. to William Phillips in Rome.

EN ROUTE TO WASHINGTON,
Sept. 15, 1938

Dear Bill:

Yours of September first has reached me just as the papers state you are again deferring your trip home. I think you are wise, because Chamberlain's visit to Hitler today may bring things to a head or may result in a temporary postponement of what looks to me like an inevitable conflict within the next five years.

Perhaps when it comes the United States will be in a position to pick up the pieces of European civilization and help them to save what remains of the wreck—not a cheerful prospect.

The complete ignorance of American conditions and fundamental strength on the part of highly placed Italians, reminds me of Johnny's conversation with an Italian, I think the Minister of Finance, in Venice a year ago. The Minister suggested to Johnny that I should pay a visit to Mussolini. Johnny very properly suggested that Mussolini might well pay a visit to the President. The Minister could not comprehend the suggestion and Johnny told him with complete politeness that the United States had three times the population and ten times the resources of Italy, and that the whole of Italy would fit very comfortably into the State of Texas.

You are right in saying that we are an unemotional people over here in the sense that we do not easily lose our heads, but if we get the idea that the future of our form of government is threatened by a coalition of European dictators we might wade in with everything we have to give.

If a war starts now the situation here will be very different from 1914. In that year, while the great majority of Americans were inclined to sympathize with the Allies, there was an honest effort, led by the President, to remain neutral in thought. And also there was a good deal of German sympathy. Today I think 90 percent of our people are definitely anti-German and anti-Italian in sentiment—and incidentally, I would not propose to ask them to be neutral in thought. I would strongly encourage their natural sympathy while at the same time avoiding any thought of sending troops to Europe.

What a plight the unfortunate Jews are in. It gives them little comfort to remind them that they have been "on the run" for about 4000 years.

Very sincerely yours,

Pressure against Czechoslovakia, which had begun after the incorporation of Austria, now was building up to the Munich crisis. On September 5 the French government had suspended all army leaves.. On September 7 the London Times, reflecting the views of the British Foreign Office, had suggested that the Czech government cede all Sudeten areas to Germany as the best solution of the Czech-Sudeten minority crisis. At the Nuernberg Nazy Party Congress on September 12, Hitler had declared that the "oppression" of the Sudeten Germans must end or Germany would come to their help. Two days later Mussolini announced his support of Hitler on this issue, and on the day of this letter Prime Minister Chamberlain flew to Berchtesgaden to hear Hitler's terms of settlement.

The reference to the plight of the Jews was evoked by a series of anti-Semitic decrees in Italy in July and August. Phillips in his letter commented on Foreign Minister Count Ciano's complete ignorance of American affairs.

F.D.R. to Cordell Hull.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Sept. 29, 1938

Memorandum for the Secretary of State:

I should like to get the following thought, unofficially and "off the record," to Mr. Beck in Poland.

"The President has always felt personal affection and friendship for the Polish nation and Government ever since he was able to help the Polish troops in the World War; so he feels that he can, as an old friend, suggest his disappointment at the Polish record of the past week.

He appreciates fully the historic and racial position of Poland in connection with the Teschen area. He knows that Poland had every right to suggest in a quiet and friendly way that the Polish majority in the Teschen district should be treated in accordance with the same general principles as the German majority in the Sudeten area. But he did not like what came very close to being a threatening attitude. It reminded him of a fight between a very big boy and a very little boy. The big boy had the little boy on the ground and a third boy stepped forward and kicked the little boy in the stomach. As the English would say—"That isn't cricket."

F.D.R.

On September 19 the British and French had agreed to Hitler's terms, outlined at Berchtesgaden, and submitted them to the Czech government, which found them unacceptable. In the meantime, Poland and Hungary, after conferring with Hitler, joined the wolf pack and made demands on Czechoslovakia that their minorities receive treatment equal to that accorded to the Sudeten Germans.. On September 29 the Munich agreement was signed and the Czechs were compelled to yield. On October 2, Czechoslovakia yielded to a Polish ultimatum as well, and ceded the Teschen area, which was promptly occupied by Polish troops.

F.D.R. to Mackenzie King in Ottawa.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Oct. 11, 1938

My dear Mackenzie:

I am deeply grateful for your message and letter with reference to the part I was privileged to play in the amelioration of the European crisis. I can assure you that we in the United States rejoice with you, and the world at large, that the outbreak of war was averted.

To me the most heartening aspect of the situation is the fact that this feeling of relief has been so spontaneous and has been expressed with such obvious sincerity throughout the world. We have had before our eyes tangible proof, if proof were needed, that the people of the world have a clear realization of what a general European war would mean and that those who work for the peaceful solution of international problems have the overwhelming support of their fellowmen.

I am still concerned, as I know you are, when we consider prospects for the future. I cannot help but feel that unless very soon Europe as a whole takes up important changes in two companion directions—reduction of armaments and lowering of trade barriers—a new crisis will come. If Hitler means what he said so definitely, he will have to go along and if he did not mean what he said, he will not go along. That thought may be a childishly simple one but I think it expresses the immediate test.

I still look forward to that visit when we get around to our trade agreement!

Faithfully yours,

On September 26, F.D.R. had appealed to Czechoslovakia, Germany, Britain, and France, urging that negotiations not be broken off and that a peaceful settlement be sought. Hitler's reply on September 27 said that the suestion of war or peace was up to the Czech government. F.D.R. immediately answered Hitler, saying that the important thing was that negotiations should continue. There was considerable debate after the Munich crisis whether F.D.R.'s messages had had any influence on Hitler's decision to negotiate rather than to march. The week after Munich the preponderant attitude throughout the world was one of relief that war had been avoided. Sumner Welles, in a broadcast October 3, echoed the views held in some Administration circles that out of the crisis had emerged a chance for a new world order "based upon justice and law."

U. S. Turning Clock Back in Japan

By Hessell Tiltman

Mr. Tiltman, chief Far Eastern correspondent for the London Daily Herald, has covered the Orient since 1935. He is the author of several books on Japan and Pacific affairs.

TOKYO—In Japan they are saying, "Thanks be to General MacArthur for our daily gift."

Recent "gifts" handed by the benevolent Supreme Commander to his Japanese proteges—either on his own initiative or at the suggestion of the Far Eastern Commission—include permission to raise a parimilitary "police" force of 75,000 men, the size of Japan's standing army following World War I; lifting of all limits on textile production; lifting of restrictions on all but 463 of the 1203 firms previously under tight SCAP control because of prewar or wartime Zaibatsu connections; opening of United States ports to Japanese ships; permission to tax foreigners in Japan; restoration to the Japanese government of control over immigration and customs; an increasing voice in the control of the processes of trade, commerce, police, communications and banking; the sending of an unofficial Japanese deputation to the United Nations; the promise that Japan will be represented at the peace talks; placing of United Nations nationals in Japan under the jurisdiction of Japanese police and courts, and the "unpurging" of more than 13,000 Japanese previously barred from holding public office because of past militaristic or ultranationalistic associations.

To all of this, the United States Securities Exchange Commission added one more "gift" highly valued by the Japanese: the resumption of trading in certain Japanese foreign currency bonds.

Still further transfers of power back to the Japanese government are pending. Guessing what the next "MacArthur gift" will be is a popular parlor game in foreign embassies here.

Jap Uniforms Reappear

THE speed with which MacArthur is turning the clock back and recreating a Japan in her own prewar image, is making foreign observers dizzy.

The streets of Tokyo, for five years sprinkled with American uniforms, today are dotted with Japanese khaki and Japanese army-style hats complete with insignia. These men are dressed like soldiers, armed like soldiers, trained like soldiers, and are paid more than most other Japanese public servants. According to SCAP, they are not soldiers—they are members of the new National Police Reserve. According to the Japanese, they are Premier Shigeru Yoshida's private army, under the personal control of the Premier.

Japanese ships are again sailing the high seas. At last official count, 89 Japanese-flag vessels, totaling 760,000 gross tons, were engaged in overseas voyages, an increase of more than 100 percent in six months. And with Japanese shipyards working on more ocean-going construction, and the impending reestablishment of regular Japanese shipping lines to Seattle, San Francisco, New York and other foreign ports, expansion will speed up.

Japanese "trade offices"—a euphemism for Japanese consulates established in advance of the signing of a treaty—have been opened in the United States and many other countries. They are staffed by diplomat and trade experts hand-picked by Yoshida.

MacArthur's permission to the Japanese to tax Allied nationals in Japan while their country is still technically in a state of war with the West, means that American, British, Australian and Dutch businessmen are in effect required to contribute to the liquidation of Japan's war costs. And foreigners must not only pay, but pay through the nose: the Japanese income tax amounts to 55 percent of all income over $834 yearly.

A Surprising Method

THE sending of a deputation of three Japanese to be present when the United Nations Assembly discusses the Russian failure to account for 370,000 Japanese prisoners of war surprised some diplomatic quarters, but not as much as the unpurging first. Since that time we have had our Election and while the State of New York did very well on the whole, we lost in a good many other States because, frankly, our officeholders and our candidates had not measured up.

You are right about the European situation. Our British friends must begin to fish or cut bait. The dictator threat from Europe is a good deal closer to the United States and the American Continent than it was before.

My love to Olive. I am glad that all goes well.

As ever yours,

Second thoughts had begun to set in about the reprieve gained at Munich. Pell, in his letter, expressed the growing doubt that Munich was more than a costly truce. In his opinion, Chamberlain had bet the future of the British Empire on Hitler's integrity, and while events would settle the wager it was Pell's fear that Chamberlain would lose.

Concerning F.D.R.'s views about the defeated candidates in the election, see the next letter.

F.D.R. to Josephus Daniels in Mexico City.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Nov. 14, 1948

Dear Chief:

Many thanks for your notes. I am not wholly reconciled to last Tuesday's results, but I believe that they are on the whole helpful. We have eliminated certain individuals and certain intraparty fights which were doing positive harm.

Curley in Massachusetts is, I hope, finally out of the picture. Quinn and O'Hara in Rhode Island tried to murder each other and both are dead! Cross was too old a story in Connecticut and Lonergan was a reactionary. Hague was slapped down in New Jersey and the Pennsylvania row brought inevitable defeat. In Ohio, Davey, the worst of our Governors, wrecked the whole ticket.

Beside cleaning out some bad local situations, we have on the positive side eliminated Phil LaFollette and the Farmer-Labor people in the Northwest as a standing Third Party threat. They must and will come to us if we remain definitely the liberal party.

Frankly, I think we will have less trouble with the next Congress than with the last. I think the idea is slowly getting through the heads of people like Tydings and George and Bennett Clark that even if they control the 1940 convention they cannot elect their ticket without the support of this Administration—and I am sufficiently honest to decline to support any conservative Democrat.

I am working at the present time on two very important things—first, national defense, especially mass production of planes; and, second, the establishment of a better system of constant publicity with the idea not only of making clear our objectives and methods, but also nailing the deliberate misstatements of fact as fast as they are made.

Affectionately,

On the heels of the disappointing outcome of F.D.R.'s intervention in the primaries, the Democrats took a beating in the November elections. Republican representation in the House increased from 88 to 170. Their senatorial delegation went up by eight, which still left them in the minority; but, together with the conservative Democrats, they could block any measure they didn't like. There were 13 more Republican governors. Daniels wrote from Mexico that he felt the reactionary Democratic Senators had sowed the seeds which the Republicans had reaped.

F. D. R. to Cordell Hull.

WARM SPRINGS,
April 3, 1939

This memorandum I prepared for talk with Ambassador Prince Colonna when he presented his credentials on March 19, 1939.

F. D. R.

[Written in longhand]:

Muss. hold key to peace
Hitler—bad shape—war as way out.
Has to have Italy. Then cast her aside.

1. Neutrality Act amended
2. World opinion mobilized Eventual loss of war.
3. Italy's int. with west. democ.
4. Go slow—with France
5. Sit around table and work it out
6. Get nothing in end by wars
7. Save peace—save dom. of Europe by Germany.

On March 15, four days before the new Italian Ambassador presented his credentials to F. D. R., Hitler, in violation of his pledges at Munich, occupied all of Czechoslovakia. F.D.R.'s statement to Ambassador Colonna that the Neutrality Act would be amended was a little premature. On March 20 Key Pittman introduced a resolution in the Senate to amend the neutrality laws to permit nations with money and ships to buy arms in this country. England and France, with their great cash reserves and shipping fleets, would be the chief beneficiaries. The bill bogged down in a fierce struggle between isolationists and interventionists, and the arms embargo was not repealed until after Germany's declaration of war in September.

Dear Jack:

Ever so many thanks for the set of the new Turkish stamps.

Do write me your personal impressions of the effect on Turkey and Turkish policy caused by the Russian and German alignment. Of course, I hope greatly that Turkey will not change what seems to me to be a pretty sensible present policy.

As ever yours,

On August 21, as Hitler's demands on Poland for the return of Danzig reached a climax, the news came that Germany and the U.S.S.R. would sign a nonaggression pact. The Nazi-Soviet Pact was signed August 24; it set the stage for the German attack on Poland September 1.

Charles Edison to F.D.R. at the White House.

WASHINGTON,
SEPT. 2, 1939

Mr. President:

In order to get a thought in connection with the page you wanted for Sunday's Radio talk I started myself off with the attached—

My only reason for sending it is that somebody ought to make a record of how you felt after getting the phone call and this may serve as notes for—that somebody— Edison

SEPT. 2, 1939

Last Friday at ten minutes of three o'clock in the morning Ambassador Bullitt telephoned me from Paris the tragic news that hostilities had commenced in earnest—that bombs were falling on Polish cities. Within a few minutes I had reached Sec. Hull, Sec. Woodring and Acting Sec. Edison—State—War—and Navy. Lights soon were burning in many offices. The machinery of democratic government moved swiftly and moved efficiently.

An unknown and unknowable destiny yawned before mankind that morning. Yet, I was almost startled by a strange feeling of familiarity—a feeling that I had been thru it all before. But after all it was not strange. During the long years of the World War the telephone at my beside with a direct wire to the Navy Dept. had time and again brought me other tragic messages in the night—the same rush messages were sent around—the same lights snapped on in the nerve centers of government. I had in fact been thru it all before. It was not strange to me but more like picking up again an interrupted routine.

Unless some miracle beyond our present grasp changes the hearts of men the days ahead will be crowded days—crowded with the same problems, the same anxieties that filled to the brim those September days of 1914. For history does in fact repeat.

About three o'clock in the morning the other day, after I had been informed of the fighting and bombing in Poland, my mind raced back some 22 years ago when the special telephone line from the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy Department used to ring in the night hours to inform me of the sinking of ships or of other acts of war. The parallel of then and now is striking, but it must go no farther. Twenty-five years ago, due to similar causes, the people of this country, excited by the war in Europe, allowed themselves to be drawn into a frenzy of increasing prices, of increasing the cost of living. The result of this mistake we all know to our sorrow. Whether the temptation comes from at home or from abroad, excessive profits and sky-rocketing prices for materials and labor are paid for out of human misery. True patriotism, in this hour of crisis, includes the determination that no warlike events shall be permitted to disturb the peaceful and orderly pursuits of the American people. Our defense, geographically and in a military sense, and particularly in a financial and economic sense, remains adequate only to the degree that we soberly and earnestly refuse to be drawn into the byways of profiteering and speculation and thus neglect the task that lies before us,—to defend our country and our people. Notwithstanding what other nations have been forced to do, it should not be necessary for our government to invoke the drastic powers of wartime to maintain our economic structure. It will not be necessary, if our business men, our manufacturers and our labor leaders exert their great influence to prevent excessive price raising, and succeed in restraining the cupidity of those jackals of war, the profiteers.

These were Navy Secretary Edison's notes on what F. D. R. had said at the Cabinet meeting the afternoon of September 1.

F.D.R. to Robert E. Wood in Chicago

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Oct. 12, 1939

Dear Bob:

I really thought that at your age you would have learned to discriminate between newspaper interpretations on the one hand and facts on the other. I do not know anyone in official Washington who, as you say, "feels it inevitable that this country should be drawn into the European conflict." You make all kinds of wild and wholly incorrect statements. "The whole Department of State" is not permeated with this feeling, nor are "some of the Ambassadors," neither is "notably the Ambassador to France." Neither do I share this feeling. Neither does Mrs. Roosevelt share this feeling.

I think, too, that you are asking the impossible when you suggest that high officials of the Federal Government should be "neutral in thought." What you mean is, of course, that while they cannot humanly be neutral in thought, they ought not to let this affect their neutrality of action in any shape, manner or form.

So, my dear friend, stop being disturbed and get both of your feet back on the ground.

Always sincerely,

Gen. Robert E. Wood, chairman of the board of Sears Roebuck, had served on various business advisory councils of the New Deal. He was a leading isolationist spokesman, and became head of the America First Committee.

F.D.R. to Joseph C. Grew in Tokyo

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Nov. 30, 1939

Dear Joe:

It is grand to get yours of November 6 on my return this morning from a few days' holiday in Warm Springs. In the meantime, the Finland attack has occurred and the whole of the United States is not only horrified but thoroughly angry. People are asking why one should have anything to do with the present Soviet leaders because their idea of civilization and human happiness is so totally different from ours.

We have not got that feeling about Japan but things might develop into such a feeling if the Japanese government were to fail to speak as civilized twentieth century human beings.

Do keep on writing me from time to time.

As ever yours,

F.D.R. to Josiah W. Bailey in Washington.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
JAN. 12, 1940

HIGHLY "PUSSONAL"

Dear Josiah:

I have yours of January tenth and I wish you could have been here the other day when I talked with some of the leading Baptists and Lutherans in regard to Mr. Taylor's going to the Vatican.

In the conduct of foreign relations, which is, of course, my responsibility, it is necessary for me to observe certain amenities of life. Whether we like it or not, mere messenger boys, even when they are messenger boys, sent by the President of the United States, eat in the servants' hall in foreign countries—and I could have hesitated to put Myron Taylor, who, after all, is a very great American, into such a position. If you were President you would not do it either.

Again, whether we like it or not there are certain titles which carry with them the right to sit at the supper table above the salt. Whether an American who is essentially acting as a messenger boy is called an Ambassador or by some other title ought to make very little practical difference in this country but makes a very great deal of difference in every other country, including, for example, Afghanistan, Tibet, London, Paris and Rome!

I am perhaps being a bit facetious but if some of my good Baptist brethren in Georgia had done a little preaching from the pulpit against the K.K.K. in the '20s, I would have a little more genuine American respect for their Christianity!

The protest is due, of course, to a lack of appreciation of the difficulties and the niceties of conducting foreign affairs, and I am wholly charitable toward them—and, furthermore, I think the result of our conference was 100% good and that we shall hear little or nothing more of it.

Do come down and see me very soon.

Very sincerely yours,

Senator Bailey of North Carolina had protested the designation of Myron Taylor as an ambassador, because such a designation would offend Protestant groups in this country and did not strictly describe Taylor's duties as a presidential "messenger" to the Vatican.

Confidential memorandum for the Secretary of War:

This is not at all what I asked for.

I know all about existing rail connections — Harpers Ferry, Norfolk, etc.—also about possible locations for new bridges to connect the north and south across the Potomac River.

Let me put the question this way: A sudden attack is made on M plus 30 day, either by a foreign enemy or by a sudden domestic uprising. This attack requires the immediate movement of troops, equipment and supplies on a large scale from the northeastern seaboard section into the State of Virginia. The present railroad bridge in Washington is bombed or in part blown up, requiring repairs which would take at least ten days. The question is this—can the Army, by using District of Columbia streets either from the northeast section or from the Georgetown section, lay tracks across the Memorial Bridge or the Georgetown Bridge to the Virginia side and from that side connect up with the main line of the R. F. & P. in the neighborhood of the new airport? This involves an answer to the question—can such land connections be made on the Washington side and the Virginia side and can the two existing highway bridges carry freight cars and small artillery? F.D.R.

The Secretary of War, in compliance with a memo from General Watson, had had a study made of railroad bridges across the Potomac.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

Dear John:

Many thanks for yours of March twenty-ninth. Since then the Danish and Norwegian aggressions have taken place and your Belgian and Netherlands situations seem to be a little more tense than when you wrote. I pray God the Germans will not attack in the West, but judging by the Scandinavian action they are complete experts at hiding their moves.

All goes well here and the news of the past ten days has greatly impeded the local and national political dog fights. All to the good!

As ever yours,

Cudahy, who had been promoted to the Brussels embassy, had written that the majority view in Brussels was that the war would never assume a military character. He did not agree with this, and believed there would be a major offensive in the spring. On April 9, German troops moved into Denmark and Norway, and on May 10 they invaded the Low Countries.

Memorandum for the Under-Secretary of State:

In reply to Bullitt's No. 963, Paris, May 31st, 9 A. M., I suggest the following:

"I regard suggestion for building destroyers here most inadvisable because it takes about two and a half years to complete them. Any exchange for American destroyers probably inacceptable because of enormous sea area which must be patrolled by us and would require Congressional action which might be very difficult to get. Our old destroyers cannot be sold as obsolete as is proved by fact. All of them are now in commission and in use or are in process of being commissioned for actual use.

"Several American Republics have destroyers which they might be willing to sell and could sell under their laws."

F.D.R.

On May 14, French Premier Paul Reynaud had broached the idea of the sale or lease of old destroyers, and on May 15 Churchill had asked for a loan of 40 or 50.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
June 7, 1940

Dear Lew:

I beat you to it! Very many planes are actually on the way to the Allies, deliveries to this Government being put off. Furthermore, the Attorney General has given an excellent ruling under which we are acting. We are turning in old Army and Navy materiel to the manufacturers who have been given orders for new and up-to-date materiel. I have a sneaking suspicion that the old materiel which we are turning in will be on its way to France in a few days.

Actually I am adopting the "thought" that the more effective immediately usable materiel we can get to the other side will mean the destruction of an equivalent amount of German materiel—thereby aiding American defense in the long run.

So you see I am doing everything possible—though I am not talking very much about it because a certain element of the Press, like the Scripps-Howard papers, would undoubtedly pervert it, attack it and confuse the public mind. This is inadvisable even though I am personally well accustomed to it.

I am glad you found the sentiment right in Arizona. Very soon there will be the simple statement you speak of.

Always sincerely,

Douglas, who had broken with F.D.R. in 1934 on domestic policy, now rallied to his support. He suggested that the Army and Navy return materiel in their possession to the factories, which would release it to the Allies. There was, however, considerable opposition to diverting war materials to the Allies, particularly from the isolationists, and War Secretary Woodring was one of them.

The materiel which F.D.R. said would be on its way to France referred to 105 planes which Henry Morgenthau persuaded the Army and Navy to release. These were flown to Quebec and placed on the French aircraft carrier Bearn. Unfortunately, France capitulated as the Bearn was crossing the Atlantic.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
July 30, 1940

The President asks me to explain to you personally that while Senator Truman is an old and trusted friend of the President's his invariable practice has been not to take part in primary contests. This is because in contests of this character among members of his own party the President must stand aloof regardless of any personal preference he might have. Of course after the primary contests have been held the contests then are clear-cut between the candidates of opposing parties. The President thought this confidential explanation was due to you in order that you would understand the limitations he is under in sending the message in response to your telegram of July 28.

Memorandum:

At Cabinet meeting, in afternoon, long discussion in regard to devising ways and means to sell directly or indirectly 50 or 60 World War old destroyers to Great Britain. It was the general opinion, without any dissenting voice, that the survival of the British Isles under German attack might very possibly depend on their getting these destroyers.

It was agreed that legislation to accomplish this is necessary.

It was agreed that such legislation if asked for by me without any preliminaries would meet with defeat or interminable delay in reaching a vote.

It was agreed that the British be approached through Lord Lothian to find out if they would agree to give positive assurance that the British Navy, in the event of German success in Great Britain, would not under any conceivable circumstances fall into the hands of the Germans and if such assurances could be received and made public, the opposition in the Congress would be greatly lessened. I suggested that we try to get further assurance from the British that the ships of their Navy would not be sunk, but would sail for North American or British Empire ports where they would remain afloat and available.

It was agreed that I would call up William Allen White, who has recently talked with Willkie on this subject; ask White to come to Washington at once to see Hull, Knox and Stimson and after that to see me; then returning to see Willkie and seek to get, with Willkie's approval, the support of Joe Martin and Charlie McNary for such a plan. It was agreed that if this procedure went through successfully that I would, at once, send a definite request to the Congress for the necessary legislation.

I stressed the point that in all probability the legislation would fail if it had substantially unanimous Republican opposition—and that the crux of the matter lay in the vote of the Republican minority in each house. I stressed the importance of having the issue acted on without regard to party politics in any way.

At 8:30 p. m., I talked with William Allen White, who was in Estes Park, Colorado; explained the above to him and asked him to come East.

He told me that he was sure that Willkie's attitude in the matter was the same as mine. I explained to him that that was wholly insufficient, and that Willkie's attitude was not what counted but that the Republican policy in Congress was the one essential.

White told me he would get in touch with Willkie and let me know at the earliest possible moment. F.D.R.

F.D.R. believed at this time that the strongest case for transfer of the destroyers would be a British pledge with respect to their fleet. Churchill, however, was reluctant to have the deal pivot on the fleet, because such a pledge, contemplating as it did the fall of Britain, would be injurious to public morale. Nor did Churchill want any restraints on Britain's freedom of decision as to what disposition should be made of their fleet. The quid pro quo then shifted to the exchange of naval and air bases for the destroyers, and, at a meeting with Morgenthau, Stimson, Knox and Welles on August 13, F.D.R. drafted the essential principles of the agreement. Several members of F.D.R.'s Cabinet, notably Attorney General Jackson, vigorously supported by Stimson, persuaded F.D.R. that he did not need to submit the plan to Congress. Finally, on September 3, in an exchange of notes between Lord Lothian, the British Ambassador, and Secretary Hull, the exchange was effected. It included the leasing of bases in Bermuda and Newfoundland as gifts, and 99-year leases of bases around the Caribbean in exchange for the destroyers.

Memorandum for E.R.:

The real answer which you cannot use is that if we forbid oil shipments to Japan, Japan will increase her purchases of Mexican oil and furthermore, may be driven by actual necessity to a descent on the Dutch East Indies. At this writing, we all regard such action on our part as an encouragement to the spread of war in the Far East.

F.D.R.

Japan saw in the fall of France and the Netherlands her opportunity to establish control over all of Asia. In September she moved her troops into French Indo-China, and F.D.R. was worried lest she continue onward toward the Dutch East Indies.

F.D.R. to John J. Pershing.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Nov. 13, 1940

My dear General Pershing:

I know that you have been closely following the situation in France during these last few months and that you realize how important it is in the interest of our own country that the French Government at Vichy should not enter into any agreement with Germany which would directly or indirectly facilitate the attempt of the axis powers to defeat Great Britain. It is in my judgment urgently necessary therefore that the influence of the United States be exercised to the fullest extent possible in the effort to keep France from entering into engagements which would help Germany.

I want to ask you, therefore, if you will accept appointment as Ambassador to France. Your personal prestige with the French people would prove of the greatest value in this endeavor and your close relationship with Marshal Petain would undoubtedly make it easier for the views of this Government to be expressed to him through you in a friendly way but without reserve. I feel that your acceptance of this mission at this critical time would be of the greatest benefit to this country.

However, I do not want you to consider this "an order." I do not want you to accept the responsibilities involved if you feel the tax upon your strength would be greater than that which you can properly bear.

I am asking General Watson to take this letter to you, and I shall be glad if you will let me know orally through him what your answer may be.

My warmest regards to you, and believe me

Yours very sincerely,

General Pershing's doctors said he should not undertake this assignment, and F.D.R. then offered it to Admiral William D. Leahy, at that time Governor of Puerto Rico.

'Dog Issue' Victories Teach Doctors New Tactics

By James E. Hague
Post Reporter

AGGRESSION, a notoriously unpopular tactic, is paying off for the friends of medical research.

The welter of election news obscured two results of that aggressiveness—victories over the antivivisectionists in two of the cult's hotbeds, Baltimore and Los Angeles.

The issue in both cities was the same—the use of unclaimed pound dogs for laboratory research. The results were also the same, despite a cagily worded antivivisection resolution in Baltimore.

The doctors and their friends won, by the resounding margin of 160,000 to 38,000 in Baltimore and by the narrower but still convincing score of 357,000 to 261,000 in Los Angeles.

Most heartening to the victors was not the immediate result, a steady supply of dogs for medical experimentation, although normally that would be enough. But similar victories have been scored elsewhere, especially since the doctors went on the offensive in this matter.

The real victory, the friends of research feel, is that the two votes show that an overwhelming citizen effort can be marshaled against the highly vocal antivivisectionists. Further, they boast, the antivivisectionists were whipped badly November 7 in two cities where they have been strong, largely because both cities have Hearst newspapers, almost the sine qua non of the antivivisection movement.

THE BATTLE in both cities was strikingly similar, historically and immediately. The background is this:

The antivivisectionists are dedicated to denying medical laboratories any dogs for experiments. The doctors say they need the dog because it is a large animal with anatomy and reactions fairly similar to those of humans.

The antivivisectionists charge that the experiments are cruel and unnecessary, that those who operate on dogs are sadists and torturers. The cult flourishes in a city with a Hearst newspaper because William Randolph Hearst has long been the Great White Father of the movement.

The doctors contend that the antivivisectionists talk nonsense, and that if they really meant what they said they would as soon deny themselves the beef of gelded cattle as deny a doctor the right to perform painless experiments on dogs in the hope of advancing the health of humans.

The antivivisectionists, however, made up in decibels what they may have lacked in logic. The politicians, it developed, to practically no one's surprise, could be frightened by a group which knew how to turn on the heat, in letters, telegrams and impassioned pleas. The politicians may have thought the cause of science to be good, but they also seemed convinced that it wasn't the kind of a thing anybody would vote for.

That is what Baltimore and Los Angeles disproved.

THE DOG ISSUE in both cities was on the ballot in the form of a referendum. It was preceded by city council fights provoked by the doctors and their cohorts in their determination to take the play from the AV's.

The script for both shows could have come from the same pen.

The medical schools could not get dogs from the city pound in L. A. or Baltimore. They urged an ordinance giving approved, inspected schools a small minority of the dogs which were going to be put to death as strays.

After what can be mildly described as stormy sessions, the councils voted to give the dogs to the medical schools.

The issue, however, wound up in both cities on the November 7 ballots. In Baltimore, the antivivisectionists got far more than the necessary 10,000 signatures forcing a referendum (the State's Attorney is now investigating as to just how many of those sworn signatures were valid). The question, No. 9, was so worded that a vote "Yes" was a vote for the antivivisectionists.

In Los Angeles, the council put the matter to referendum as Proposition C. A "Yes" vote was against the antivivisectionists.

By this time, the doctors had apparently realized two things. One, the defensive role might be more dignified but dignity was no balm for defeat. Two, that to win they had to get tremendous citizen participation in their cause.

IN BALTIMORE, there was a ready-made vehicle for the citizen approach in the Maryland Society for Medical Research. This was a permanent organization designed to help the cause of research in various ways, financial as well as others.

Last spring, when the referendum vote on the dog issue seemed certain, the society started its wheels rolling. The antivivisectionists, with a long-established office in Baltimore and apparently well-heeled headquarters in Boston, had long been set for the showdown battle.

G. Van Velsor Wolf, a worker for civic causes in Baltimore, headed the medical research group which quickly fanned out. One set of workers buttonholed the politicians (most of whom, it is said, gave them unofficial support but begged off from an out-and-out declaration).

Another set of workers established a speakers' bureau and went from labor union meeting to labor union meeting until the CIO and AFL were solidly in line. Someone else tackled the veterans' organizations and someone else the church groups. The same went for the civic organizations.

A phalanx of support was put together which included labor unions, civic groups, the churches (an editorial in the Catholic Review emphatically advised the Catholics to vote against the antivivisectionists)—a final tally of about 75 top organizations.

EVERY DOCTOR was urged to send a letter to 200 of his patients urging a vote "Against" banning the experimental use of dogs. Many of them did.

A documentary film, contributed at cost, was made about Anna, one of the original dogs used in the experiments which Dr. Alfred Blalock, professor of surgery at Johns Hopkins, calls the foundation stone of the famous "blue baby" operation. This was shown in almost every movie house in town.

The medical research society hired two secretaries and a publicity counsel. It spent some money for radio and TV time and some money for newspaper ads.

In the matter of newspapers, the edge went to the researchers as the Sunpapers, morning, evening and Sunday, took up their cause with the vigor the antivivisectionists had expected only from their corner—the Baltimore News-Post and American, evening and Sunday. The sports editor, Rodger H. Pippen, was the big wheel in the Hearst effort.

The antivivisectionists outmatched the researchers in radio and TV time, an expensive bracket, and even in this one the "pros" claimed an "anti" foul.

One of the researchers' spot announcements said: "Don't Cripple Medical Research, Vote Against Question 9." Almost immediately, the radios were blaring the antivivisectionists' rejoinder: "Don't Cripple Medical Research, Vote for Question 9." On the protest that this was dirty pool indeed, most of the radio stations yanked the offending announcement.

THE RESEARCHERS, however, don't give most of the credit to these fairly standard techniques.

Van Velsor Wolf and the other leaders of the fight felt that the antivivisectionists had 40,000 votes on their side and that every last one of those votes would be cast.

Predicting that only a total of 100,000 persons could be persuaded to vote on the issue, they felt that only a mass effort to turn out a maximum vote would assure victory.

They put their strongest faith in a pre-election, door-to-door canvass and an election day polling booth turnout.

The women—doctors' wives, medical students, P-TA'ers, housewives—organized the effort set for November 4, 5 and 6. In those three days, some 2000 to 2500 volunteers punched the doorbells of every registered voter in all but about a score of the city's 500-odd precincts. Every voter was given a card and a brief pep talk on the benefits or research and was urged to vote "Against."

On election day, 2000 students turned out, wearing brassards with a blue cross, from Maryland, Hopkins, Goucher, Morgan, Loyola, Notre Dame. They spoke to every voter they could, urging a "no" vote.

As one politician said later, "Why, they outnumbered us, the real pros, 3 to 1, in my ward."

The work paid off. The winners feel that the overwhelming margin, more than 4 to 1, will stiffen the spines of the politicians. The researchers say the politicians have expressed private distaste for the antivivisectionists and they expect them now to have less stomach for a cause whose backers are outnumbered four to one.

THE LOS ANGELES fight got a little tougher in the clinches. The Los Angeles Examiner, in a front-page editorial bemoaning the council's approval of the dog ordinance (before the referendum), urged that the issue be presented to the voters and:

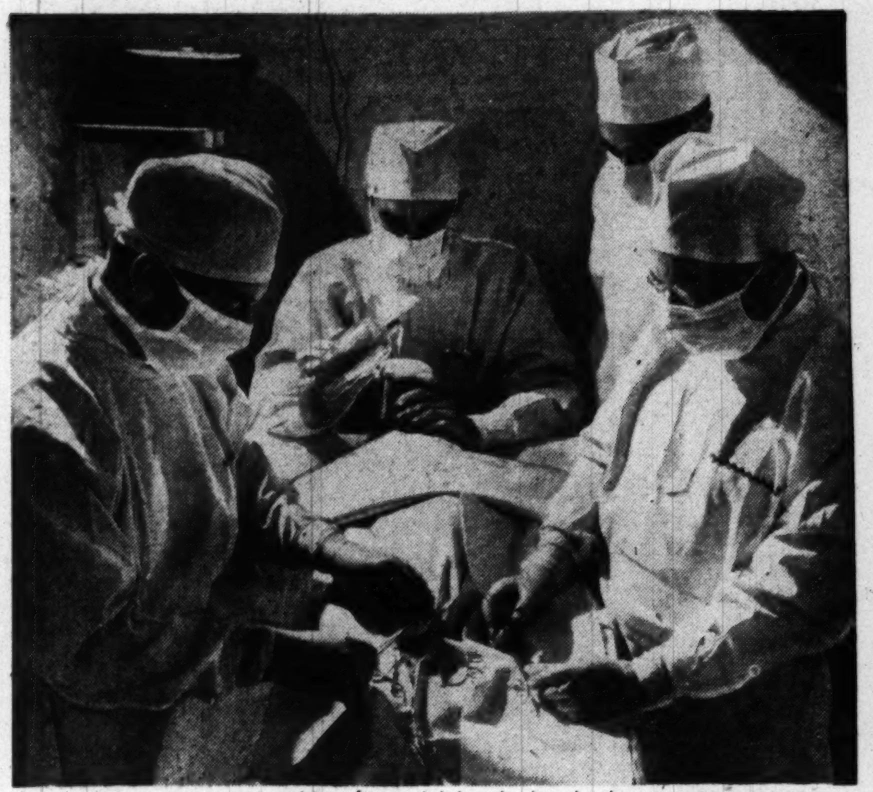
"They (the voters) will express THEIR ABHORRENCE AGAINST NEEDLESS CRUELTY and rid the community of the danger to public morality presented by sanguinary lust masquerading as science."

The AV's battled for mikes in the council hearing. The researchers usurped the favorite leaflet stand of the antivivisectionists, Hollywood and Vine, with resultant turmoil, the premedical men said.

The antivivisectionists found themselves on the inside of a picket line at one of their mass meetings. Movie Actress Marie Wilson added her famous form and her voice to the battle against the "vivisectors.' '

IN THE DISTRICT, the doctors can't take their fight to the voters but do intend to take another bill into Congress next session in the hope of getting pound dogs. The last one was beaten in committee, 2 to 1, former Senator McGrath (D., R. I.) and Senator Smith (R., Me.) voting against. McGrath remarked that he felt the great majority of the people would be against the bill.

Actually, the District is in a unique position because the poundmaster has apparently unlimited authority to do as he will with the pound dogs—the law says he may sell or dispose of them as he sees fit. The current poundmaster won't give the dogs to the schools.



A shining argument against the antivivisectionists is the operating room in the "dog house" at Georgetown University Medical School here, where the dog under surgery receives every attention that could be given a human being

'Good Soldiers' Suit Vinson

Must the Army Have Ph.D.'s?

By Karen Salisbury

IN Washington, where talk is cheap, one elderly Southern magician has turned words into action with a wave of his cigar, for more than one-third of a century. His lair on Capitol Hill smacks of a small-town hotel lobby with its sagging leather chairs, dirty coffee mugs, and an ancient spittoon. But admirals and generals wait outside his seven-foot mahogany door as if it were Merlin's palace.

Here, 67-year-old Carl Vinson of Georgia, chairman of the powerful House Armed Services Committee, this week is busily brewing a stronger national defense. A few of his projects, to be whisked through Congress this winter: a 70-to-90 group Air Force, four full Marine divisions, a new supercarrier for the Navy, and, for the Army, a 1,500,000-man force of 18 to 20 divisions, through an escape-proof draft.

He thinks his plan, to be released soon, of a two-year draft for everyone turning 19 will cause "much less commotion" than either universal military training (outside the Army) or universal service ("conscription"). He will also insist that the services take more physically handicapped and uneducated men. Recently he asked the Army, "Just what is it you folks want, Ph.D.'s? I didn't know a man had to know how to read Greek and Latin to be a good soldier. The North Koreans seem to have done pretty good."

If anyone complains about the cost, Vinson is liable to repeat what he told former Defense Secretary Louis Johnson: "A new thought is being germinated in Washington these days. It is that by reducing the armed forces, we are, by some magical process, growing in strength. . . . This is one of the most remarkable ideas I have ever encountered."

"MR. DEFENSE," as Congress calls him, is expected to get his way, or at least most of it. His sorcery is legendary. It springs first from his home district around land-locked Milledgeville, Georgia, where he has been challenged only four times in 36 years. Constituents campaign for him and local merchants run ads like this 1932 sample: "If you want prosperity, vote for Vinson and Roosevelt, and have your shoes half-soled by George Schelling, 119 Cotton ave."

After his recent (and scarcely noticed) reelection, Milledgeville wanted to declare Vinson Day on November 11. But Vinson declined because of the recent death of his wife. Georgia already has a Vinson Heights, a Vinson Highway, and a Vinson Field.

In addition to Milledgeville, Vinson also holds his 33-man committee (19 Democrats, 14 Republicans) in the palm of his hand. In the 21 months he has been in command (plus the years he ran the old House Naval Affairs Committee), it has customarily reported bills out unanimously. As one colleague explained, "Old Carl isn't a man you want to have mad at you."

Still, Vinson keeps a few tricks up his sleeve just in case things go wrong. He may distract the committee by shuffling papers, by abruptly changing the subject, or by clipping his cigar with a huge pair of shears. One pet way of squashing the opposing faction is to send it on an investigating trip. He advises dissenting Congressmen to "come 'round to my office to straighten things out." If the magic wand fails, Vinson doesn't hesitate to use the rod. At the stormy B-36 hearings, he bluntly warned, "Everybody be quiet. We won't get excited." Huffed one shocked Senator: "I think it's terrible. You could never do that in the Senate."

HIS COLLEAGUES have called him a "demagogue," a "Simon Legree," and a "humbug like the Wizard of Oz." But when Vinson was suggested as Secretary of Defense at the Marshall debate recently, the whole House stood up and applauded. Vinson declined: "I've got all I can say grace over, right here." More than satisfied with his present job, he once joshed, "You get an electric fan, you know, after 25 years in Congress."

One friend says, "Watching Carl swing into action is like watching a V-2 take off. It's marvelous to see, but it makes you kind of nervous." He may sit back in his black leather chair, with a dreamy look in his eye, then suddenly jump up, slap on his old fedora (which he always wears whether he is going all the way to Georgia, or merely down the hall) and say, "Guess I'll go see Mr. Truman," (or General Marshall). He may turn an idea over in his mind for weeks, reading voraciously on it, and interviewing everybody who comes within range. When he decides, he announces a decision with the force of a thunderclap.

One popular "Vinson Recipe" is "letting the yeast work." By doing nothing, but implying that he might, Vinson has moved mountains. For weeks, he threatened the Defense Department with a "Re-port" on its fuzzy reserve program. Marshall quickly ordered the program revamped. Next he hinted that he was about to investigate tactical aviation, which "wasn't all we though it was, before Ko-rea." The Air Force has recently announced a new, revitalized tactical air arm.

Some charge that Vinson is as full of prejudices as the piney woods is of possum. When the Waves were pushing a bill to get them into the regular Navy, he feared they might "be running all over the world the way the Wacs did." He insisted that no Wave ever become an admiral, and declared no woman would ever run a battleship while he was around.

IN STRANGE CONTRAST to his high-powered operating, Vinson is a notorious and almost timid stay-at-home who seldom goes to Washington parties, on inspection trips, or any place much besides his Chevy Chase home or his Milledgeville farm. He refused to go up in an airplane, for example, until the spring of 1949. And then he ordered that "Mr. Symington and General Vandenberg come, too. If this plane crashes, I want it to be on the front page." He has never been up again.

He is highly unpredictable in handling military men, is just as quick to defend them as to slap them down. He says, "I have yet to encounter what can truly be called a 'military mind.' I have known many men in civilian life who have out-militaried the military. . . . In time of crisis, Congress and the Nation always turn to our military leaders. . . . Then, very quickly, we begin to cut them down. We call them the 'brass,' 'gluttons for power,' 'empire builders' . . . We have been backing and filling like this for years."

Yet Vinson takes a wicked delight in twitting "the Brass." Maj. Gen. Clovis Byers of the Army's Personnel Division tried to illustrate a point by saying, "Surely you ran across this, Mr. Vinson, when you traveled in Europe—"

Vinson shot back, "Naw, I don't, either. Never been out of the country, and I'm proud of it." Leering over his spectacles at the flustered general, he snorted, "I'm satisfied to stay right here in the U. S. A."

At the B-36 hearings, he unnerved General Kenney with, "Put it in the record, now, General, your definition of strategic bombing . . ." Kenney: "As a matter of fact, I have no definition that would suit it." Vinson, annoyed: "Then put that in the record. Go ahead." Admirals and generals are used to his order, "Let's quit the hemmin' and hawin' and get to the point."

Introducing Some Freshman Senators

WHO ARE THE MEN the voters sent to represent them in the Senate in this year's election?

Fourteen of them will be freshmen, but they all will carry weight in America's highest legislative chamber.

Get acquainted with some of them in this series of Associated Press thumbnail sketches.

Dirksen of Illinois

CHICAGO.—The average politician stops after a church supper to shake hands with the ladies who cooked it. Everett McKinley Dirksen, new Republican Senator from Illinois, is the kind who rolls up his sleeves and helps them wash the dishes.

DIRKSEN

They call him the "talkingest man in Tazewell County," and every man's picture of what a Midwestern Senator should look like.

He says he's "just a baker boy who found out long ago you can't fool the people." He worked his way through law school selling home remedies from door to door.

Leading what he called "a crusade to save our country" in his election campaign, he defeated Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas.

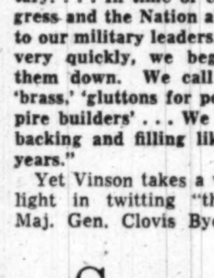
He stumped the State for 21 months, 10 times as long as Lucas did. He traveled 250,000 miles and wore out three automobiles. He made 1500 speeches. But he didn't lose his voice.

Dirksen says he is neither isolationist or internationalist, but a "moderationist"—one who takes a "moderate and realistic" viewpoint. Another moderationist, he says, is Senator Taft (R., Ohio).

Dirksen, 54, served in the House for 16 years until 1949. He quit because of an eye ailment, but he has recovered from it.—LOUIS J. KRAMP.

Duff of Pennsylvania

HARRISBURG, Pa.—James H. Duff takes to the Senate the undisputed leadership of the Republican Party in Pennsylvania and possible ambitions for the Presidency in 1952.



DUFF

The 67-year-old Duff, who keeps his graying red hair closely cropped, rose to national prominence in four action-packed years as Governor of the Keystone State.

His smashing rout of Old Guard GOP leadership at the spring primary and his decisive victory over Senator Francis J. Myers, President Truman's No. 2 man in the Senate, at the fall election, projected him into the 1952 presidential picture.

Duff says he built his program around needs of the "average guy." He says the Republican Party will have to do the same in the Nation if it wants to regain control of the Federal Government.

"All you need to do to see the Governor of Pennsylvania is to have a nickel and a telephone booth," Duff said in a campaign speech.

Duff, son of a Presbyterian minister, dabbled in politics in Pittsburgh while practicing law. He lined up as a Bull Mooser in Teddy Roosevelt's day but was little known when he came to Harrisburg in 1942 as attorney general in the cabinet of former Gov. Edward Martin, now Senator.

The Old Guard element in the GOP, centering around former Senator Joseph R. Grundy, picked Duff as Martin's successor for Governor. But the outspoken Duff soon broke with Grundy.

In one instance, the Grundy faction sought a cut in corporation taxes while some other taxes were being increased to finance a public works program.

"If you think I'm going to give you a free seat in the grandstand at the same time I'm raising the price in the bleachers, you're crazy," Duff retorted.

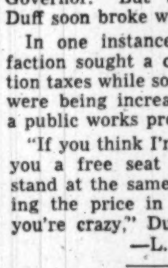
PIERRE, S. Dak.—If his opponents think he's a "pinchpenny," Francis Case, the new Republican Senator from South Dakota, is proud of it.



CASE

"In fact," he says, "I believe we need more penny-pinchers in Washington. Big money is spent too freely."

Holders of Government contracts already know Case is economy minded. He helped initiate renegotiation of World War II contracts which saved about 10 billion dollars.

Case, 54, is an old hand around Washington legislative halls. He served 14 years in the House, laboring tirelessly for Missouri River Basin development and programs to aid the Indians. But he didn't hesitate to tell constituents asking more river funds that "here's one place we can cut."

Case is best known nationally as the author of the Case labor bill, enacted by the Seventy-ninth Congress but vetoed by President Truman. Much of it was incorporated in the Taft-Hartley Act. He was coauthor of the Case-Wheeler Act for water conservation.

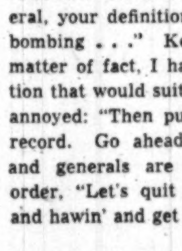
Hennings of Missouri

ST. LOUIS—Missouri's new 47-year-old Democratic Senator, big Tom Hennings of St. Louis, is a hard driver who already knows his way around Washington.



HENNINGS

Thomas C. Hennings, jr. (he'd rather be called plain Tom), put on a terrific campaign and was the only Democrat in the country to oust a Republican Senator. He downed Forrest C. Donnell, another hard campaigner, by almost 100,000 votes.

Hennings is 6 feet 1, weighs 180 and looks like an athlete. He used to run the half mile at Cornell. His father, a former Democratic circuit judge, started his political career for him at the age of 13. Tom was a page boy at the St. Louis Democratic Convention which nominated Wilson.

In 1934, at the age of 31, he swept to a 15,000-vote victory over a veteran Republican in the Eleventh Congressional District (St. Louis). For six years Hennings was a Roosevelt man on the important House Foreign Affairs Committee.

He retired from the House in 1940 to run—successfully—for circuit (district) attorney.

In his campaign against Donnell, Hennings called for a cutback in nondefense spending. He has supported the Administration's Korean policies but is not an all-out "Truman man."

Politically, he doesn't have to be. In the senatorial primary he defeated the candidate backed by the President, by Missouri's Governor and by State Democratic leaders—LARRY HALL.

Chester Davis Sounds Warning

Inflation Peak 'Still in Future'

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

IN A TOO-LITTLE-PUBLICIZED SPEECH, a high Federal Reserve Board official did some hard talking on the prospect of inflation. The burden of his remarks was, "You ain't seen nothing yet."

His prescription for the disease, interestingly enough, was not wage and price controls. Attack the problem, he said, by monetary measures.

The spokesman was Chester C. Davis, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis. The occasion was a meeting of the National Industrial Conference Board, on November 16, at Chicago.

The "inflationary kick" from defense spending, Davis said, "is still largely in the future. So too is the return to deficit financing on a large scale which I am morally certain is ahead of us."

"Brothers," said Davis, "we haven't seen anything yet to what we will see if (1) military spending is as large as projected, and (2) if we don't do better than we have been doing to finance the Government deficit in other ways than through commercial bank and central bank credit."

What Davis was talking about in the last phrase, and what he devoted the major part of his speech to, was a controversy then going on between the Federal Reserve Board and the Treasury. It related, in essence, to the price of money.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE wanted tighter money and credit, as a contra-inflationary force. The Treasury was opposed, since tighter money—higher interest rates—would result in higher carrying charges for the Federal debt.

But Davis' complaints, in his speech, are now largely academic. For a week after he spoke, on November 22, the Treasury in effect conceded the Reserve's point. It refunded some eight billion dollars' worth of maturing securities at a slightly higher interest rate—the rate which the central bank wishes to see set at this time.

But for the rest of his speech, Davis devoted himself to discussing the relative merits of trying to attack inflation by getting at its roots, or by so-called "direct controls"—price and wage fixing—which simply work on the symptoms.

THE BASIC, fruitful approach, he contended, was by the means which the Federal Reserve wanted to use—an attack on the supply of money and credit. We must reduce the over-rapid extension of credit, he said. In other words, we must "hold down increases in the flow of purchasing power as well as we can to balance the supply of available goods and services."

Said Davis:

"A restrictive monetary policy . . . is a powerful force that can be brought to bear on the monetary supply . . .

"An easy monetary policy may not, at times, be very effective in inducing economic revival, but there isn't much doubt that tight money can check a boom. When money becomes tighter, the spending plans of individuals and of businesses have to be modified downward . . .

"Price and wage controls by themselves do not stop inflation," he contended. "They may conceal and defer the effects of inflation, but sooner or later if the fundamental causes of inflation are not dealt with, there will be an explosion. A tied-down safety valve on a boiler won't hold the steam in check very long if you keep shoveling fuel into the firebox."

FURTHERMORE, Davis argued, "there is a relationship between the program of general monetary restriction . . . and the preservation of individual choice and freedom that is in danger of being overlooked.

"General controls leave freedom of business choice and decision to the individual; direct controls such as price- and wage-fixing, rationing and allocation of supplies do not.

"There is an increasing demand for price- and wage-fixing, for a more and more controlled economy. It comes from all segments of the American people—from businessmen individually and in organizations, from housewives, from all types and kinds of individuals.

"It is ironic exaggeration, perhaps, to observe that the so-called economic planners at present constitute the main vocal group now speaking out in favor of a general antiinflation program that will tend to preserve individual freedom."

'Cartel-Minded' Can Warp Schuman Plan

HOW will the Schuman Plan for pooling European coal and steel operations affect the American steel industry? What will it do to the European economy? Is it only a mask covering an old-fashioned, vicious cartel?

It would seem that no one would be in a better position to comment on these key questions than a top figure in the American steel industry who has been intimately connected, as a United States official, with the European industry.

RANDALL

One such is Clarence B. Randall, president of the Inland Steel Co., and himself an Economic Cooperation Administration consultant in Europe on steel for many months in the early stages of Marshall Plan operations.

In a speech 10 days ago in Chicago at the meeting of the National Industrial Conference Board, Randall addressed himself to the subject. Below are excerpts of his remarks:

"The Schuman Plan . . . is one of the great developments in contemporary history. . . .

"(French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman) took Europe by surprise by announcing that in his judgment the steel and coal industries of Britain and the Continental countries should be pooled, and it was such a magnificent gesture for the foreign minister of France to invite the ancient enemy, Germany, to the council table that all peace-loving people in Europe were drawn instantly to him with new hope and affection. Overnight, the spiritual leadership of Europe went back to France. . . .

"(But) those of us from America who had some familiarity with it at once said, 'Is this the beginning of the new cartel? Is all Europe to be united by restrictive price covenants? Are price policies to be determined by one man or one group of men?'

"It seemed to me clear that there was a problem for the American steel industry. There are 50 million tons of ingot production in Europe west of the Iron Curtain. There are 100 million here, and it seemed to me that if the 50 million tons should be wrapped up in one package by a snug European cartel, the ultimate impact of that upon our industry and upon the economy of a free America might be staggering. . . .

"A few weeks ago I had the great privilege of meeting Jean Monnet, the man who actually wrote the Schuman Plan. . . . I expressed to him my doubts that perhaps he was to be the architect of the most pernicious cartel the world had ever seen, but he swept my doubts away. . . .

"The difficulty is that Jean Monnet is surrounded in Europe by people who believe the opposite. European businessmen have the cartel way of life. They are government-control minded by tradition. They are restrictive-covenant minded by habit, and they are writing their impress on the Schuman Plan.

"I have seen some of the drafts and today there appears much in those drafts of the old technic: subsidization of the inefficient plant; putting into a pot if you are low cost in order that the high-cost fellow may draw out. . . .

"It seems to me that the challenge to America is clear. We must in forthright language demand that the basic charter of the Schuman Plan have written into it the principle of free and honest competition and empower the higher authority to destroy and control monopolistic practices. . . .

"There should be established quickly complete unity of thinking on the American side. There should be one spokesman who in clear and authoritative tones will say, 'America for its own protection and that of Europe demands that the Schuman Plan be based upon competition as the force that protects society.'"

Reexamination

Secretary Acheson's rebuke to the press for not having read his "reexaminist" speech last Friday week was turned upon him when he confessed that he hadn't himself read the full interview by Senator Taft which was the subject of his speech. The fact is that the speech was extemporaneous, and, though a transcript was available some time after the meeting it was unavailable to commentators when they made their comments. The lesson is that in these trying times the Secretary of State should think twice before talking off the cuff.

What Mr. Acheson actually said should modify some part of the criticism that was meted out. He was trying to distinguish between reexaminists who would really reexamine policies in the light of experience and reexaminists who would uproot established policies. But the essay as it went along got a bit complicated. For instance, at the close of his speech, Mr. Acheson said:

> Now, I mentioned this in the light of what I said earlier. In the light of what I say, does it make sense to say, "I want to reexamine our programs? I want to look at this all over again to see whether we should have started on it?" Is that the role that a leader in these troublesome times, these dangerous times, wishes to take in the world today? I think your answer is that it is not.

Why say programs instead of principles? It was natural, of course, that there should be some looseness of language in view of the impromptu nature of the speech. No matter how careful he had been, however, Mr. Acheson chose an unfortunate subject. His subject happens to be a good word, and he appeared to be making it a bad one. We need reexamination of policies as well as programs. Among the advantages that the Russians have over us is that they are expert and instantaneous reexaminists. If, to parody F.D.R., a policy doesn't work, they turn to a new policy, and that is the reason they keep the initiative.

Long Island Again

More than 100 persons have died in two train collisions on the Long Island Railroad within nine months. Yet even after the frightful Thanksgiving Eve crash in Queens, N. Y., which claimed 77 lives, the railroad officials are scornful of an automatic brake-tripping device which might have prevented both wrecks. Their seeming indifference to such a safety precaution is an additional reason why the various investigations now in progress must encompass Long Island operations from top to bottom.

Both the recent wreck and the one last February at Rockville Centre, which resulted in 33 deaths, apparently were caused by trains running through block signals. In the current instance one train was rammed from the rear after it had stopped. The fact that the first train was in the block zone should have been reflected in a red warning signal. An automatic device is in existence, and indeed was used by the Long Island in the past, which sets the brakes of the oncoming train should the engineer or motorman fail to heed a red signal. It is still rejected by Long Island officials, however, with the explanation that it loses time by causing some false stops.

Trouble on the Long Island is legion; the line's difficulties almost weekly with derailments and delays would be comical if they did not also involve tragedies. Part of the difficulty is in the dual function of the railroad: it is at once a rapid transit electric system serving 300,000 commuters daily and a relatively long haul railroad with lines stretching more than 100 miles to the tip of Long Island. In part the trouble also is attributable to the Long Island's status as an unwanted child of the Pennsylvania. An interesting report of the Nassau County Transit Commission in June, 1949, shortly after the Long Island went into receivership, charged that the Pennsylvania had systematically milked the subordinate line by refusing to afford it proper credit for its facilities used by the parent road.

Investigations ordered indignantly by the mayor and Governor can scarcely overlook the relations with the Pennsylvania. Public ownership, such as has been suggested as one solution to the Long Island's dilemma, would not necessarily put the road on a paying basis, but it might at least make sure that the lives of passengers would be protected by available safety devices which the present management seems unwilling to provide. Mechanical checks on human fallibility are especially necessary on lines carrying heavy traffic. Investigators might well ask why it is that the Long Island seems to have so much more trouble than subway and elevated systems in New York and elsewhere which operate with even less headway and have equivalent or worse problems of congestion.

Civil Defense Guidance

A grave disquiet exists in many sectors of the country over the slow start in civil defense. Some of this concern is reflected in the complaints of mayors, voiced in a report of the American Municipal Association, that they do not have enough guidance, especially on finances, to enable them to plan effectively. The blunt fact is that nowhere near the amount of urgency has been attached to civil defense readiness as to military preparations against attack. The country is critically vulnerable on this score, especially if a politico-military showdown is in any way imminent.

Unlike the British, who kept their civil defense plans intact, this country allowed its organization to fall apart after World War II. Civil defense was shunted from agency to agency like an unwanted child, and the 1948 Hopley report outlining the national need was smothered in squabbling. Even now, under the National Security Resources Board, the Office of Civil Defense is an advisory rather than an operating body, and it is without a regular director. The handbook on United States Civil Defense, issued in September of this year, is more precise than the Hopley report, but still vague on many points of organization.

At this level the next move is up to Congress. It must approve or devise legislation to place OCD on an operating status and define civil defense responsibilities, as well as determine who will pay for what. No less important is the appointment by the President of a qualified director to press the needs of civil defense.

Essential as is more precise Federal organzation, however, it cannot do the jobs that belong to States and cities. Evidence that some communities are mistakenly trying to shift their own responsibilities to the Federal Government may be seen in the Municipal Association report. Civil defense is, of course, basically a local problem, and its core is self-help. As Mayor Frank Zeidler of Milwaukee observes in the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, "No State or Federal financial program can be forthcoming until local communities know what they actually need. As local plans evolve, State and Federal patterns will develop."

Communities know, from guidance furnished by the OCD, that the Federal Government plans to do all civil defense research and set standards, that it intends to finance the stockpiling of heavy regional medical supplies, that it will build control centers down to the State level. They also know that it will help pay for certain organizational supplies such as first-aid equipment, pulmotors, radiological monitoring equipment, auxiliary generators, water purification equipment and some fire apparatus. The Federal Government is now providing makeshift raid warning service and is furnishing strategic guidance to State Governors for relay.

Thus there is much information already available for community planning. Model State laws and city ordinances have been suggested. Local officials know that they must tally their resources, prepare emergency plans such as have been worked out in Washington, purchase warning signals, train cadres, stockpile medical supplies. The job of public education, for which plenty of material is available, is also a community responsibility; one of the best pieces of work in this connection is a disaster handbook put out by Norfolk, Va., and distributed to every household. Money for such projects can come from nowhere but municipal budgets, and before local officials complain about lack of guidance, they ought to make sure that they have done all they can to meet their own responsibilities.

Much, of course, remains to be done at the State level in the way of mutual aid legislation, reciprocity compacts and so on. New York, California and Michigan are well advanced along these lines. It is significant however, that only nine States have current civil defense appropriations. Action by Congress and better Federal organization no doubt will be a spur to civil defense readiness, but it is apparent that the most urgent task is to impress upon States and communities what they must do by themselves. The time may be short.

British Curtain

The British are engaged in a pretty familiar controversy. Badly jarring the country's long tradition of respect for all forms of expression, the government imposed conditions so difficult that the Communist-dominated World Peace Congress had to abandon its meeting scheduled to be held in Sheffield and transferred it instead to Warsaw. The wisdom of the action has come in for some questioning. The meeting itself was not banned; but permission to enter England was denied to more than 50 foreign delegates, including such notables as Prof. Joliot-Curie, Pierre Cot, former French Air Minister; Louis Aragon, a French poet; the Russian writer Ilya Ehrenburg and composer Dimitri Shostakovich. According to British Information Services only those were excluded who "appeared likely to engage in action detrimental to the determination of the democracies to meet and resist aggression."

These people undoubtedly would have made nuisances of themselves in England, but it is hard to believe that they would have been dangerous. They are much too conspicuous to have had any usefulness for espionage or sabotage purposes. The worst that could have been expected from them was that they would have abused British hospitality by making disparaging remarks about British foreign policy, British institutions and British democracy. By denying them a platform in England, the British government has succeeded merely in giving them an effective pretext for saying the same things in Warsaw.

The propaganda impact of the World Peace Congress has been increased rather than diminished by this action. The excluded delegates can now assert that Britain fears the challenge of outside ideas, that the facts of British life have to be hidden from foreign eyes. A visit to England might have had a very salutary effect on some of these delegates; at least it would have demonstrated that England had nothing to hide. When the World Peace Congress convened here in 1948 (it cannot again meet here because of the McCarran Act), the National Association of Manufacturers was astute enough to offer the delegates a tour of the United States, confident that what they would see here would afford the most effective possible refutation of their preachments. The offer, though unaccepted, had great propaganda value. Indeed it more than offset the silly statements uttered at the congress itself.

Academic Follies

An interesting and illuminating discussion has been in progress for some weeks in the Literary Supplement of the Times of London concerning the relative merits of British and American scholarship. It has to do with the pursuit of literary studies, but the points made are doubtless applicable to other fields of learning. A recently published American symposium, a reviewer thought, reflected the thoroughgoing, get-to-the-bottom-of-it spirit of American research, which he sadly contrasted with the less efficient and strenuous work of his own compatriots. Most of the furious pursuit of literary learning in the United States, an Oxford don hastened to explain, goes on in the graduate departments, whereas in England the main emphasis in English studies is in the undergraduate phases of education. Anyway, said the professor, "literature exists to be enjoyed, and if it is not enjoyed it is scarcely literature," the implication being that nobody could have a really good time and work as feverishly as these American scholars do.

Intervening in the discussion, the leader-writer of the Literary Supplement undertook to show just where and how the American scholars have the advantage. For one thing, American curiosity about private documents—letters, diaries and so on—is regarded, even in England, as something quite proper and commendable, and is therefore gratified by possessors of such documents. A similar curiosity on the part of English scholars is, it seems, regarded as impertinent, a kind of vulgar snooping into what is really none of their confounded business. Thus in the matter of research the English scholar must start with one strike called against him.

What amounts to another strike is the fact that the British scholar does not possess the same highly organized library facilities and the same technical apparatus for collecting photostat and microfilm copies and all that sort of stuff. Again, if he is connected, as is usually the case, with a school or university he is (somewhat unreasonably, we gather) expected to do a good bit of teaching work. That seems to make three strikes.

Still there is one respect in which the Times writer believes British scholars do possess the advantage. This is in knowing how to present such knowledge as they are able, with their primitive steam or hand-power techniques, to scrape together. English books about English literature still evince in some degree the influence of their subject and are often read by others than professionals. American academic works about literature are, on the contrary, often downright unreadable. "Writing in academic jargon with the determination that every sentence shall say nothing more nor less than the truth, the [American] scholar creates a forest of abstract nouns intersected by critical approaches in which the reader for utter weariness lays himself down and dies."

Well, the American point of view seems to be that it serves him right, that no one in his right mind would open such a work until he had gradually hardened himself for the ordeal by long and rigorous reading of the review columns of the university quarterlies. Whether or not the Oxford don is right in saying that literature exists to be enjoyed, this is by no means the American academic conception of literature about literature, which seems to be designed primarily as a test of manly courage and endurance.

TRANSITION

The shadow of the rose sweeps up the walls:
I look down from the window. In the garden
Dead roses climb their stalks again to harden
In grey December air. One cold bird falls.
Sick of this indecisive season's hold,
Sightless with concentration on the South,
Dropping a sprig of summer from its mouth
For future nests, alas. I had been told
Of death, I had heard warning of it,
The skies cried out it too was on the wing—
I have grown wise of late. When no birds sing,
Then tears spring up in vain. Death pays one visit.
It serves no summons. It comes without a call.
It goes as yieldingly as rotten snow.
My eyes peer through the lattice, and below
A single rose clings thinly to the wall.

"The Conspiracy Trial"

In reporting the gift of the Alfred Stern Lincoln Collection to the Library of Congress, The Washington Post cited, among its "rare documents," Ben Perley Poore's "edition of The Conspiracy Trial." In the Stern Collection, it is stated, is "the third volume, (which) is very rare."

Poore's "edition of The Conspiracy Trial" is not a very rare book, or rare at all. It can be picked up in almost any second-hand book store. First published in Boston in 1865, it was republished by a subscription book store in Michigan and peddled by it agents from door to door over a good portion of the Northern States.

It is not an original work. Poore was a Washington correspondent, one of the few who reported the trial of the Lincoln conspirators. He did not draw on his own correspondence and write a narrative of the trial. What he did was to clip from The National Intelligencer its stenographic reports of the trial, and reprint them in this book, with his name on the title page. The file of that grand old paper containing the report of this trial would be a rare item in a Lincoln collection, but not a rare item to the historian, for many libraries and historical societies have such a file.

In 1886 Poore published another book, which historians often quote as the direct personal narrative of an important journalist. It is entitled: Perley's Reminiscences of 60 Years in the National Metropolis. As Poore was born in 1820, he was only 6 years of age when his Reminiscences began. In the foreword to this book he states that he drew on "diaries, autograph letters and scrapbooks" for his material. These hardly constitute his own "reminiscences." If he had written the story of his own journalistic career—which was not undistinguished — he would have made a book that would be among the most interesting and worthwhile ever coming from the pen of a Washington correspondent.

"Passage To India"

Interpretation of your November 11 editorial "Passage to India" by "Realist" (letter published November 16) deserves careful consideration. For centuries Tibet acted as a buffer state. Buddhist missionaries spread their gospel of peace, love and fellowship to the Asian countries, especially in China. This cultural affinity and missionary zeal and ideological solidarity acted as if to check each other's militaristic imperialist ventures. In modern China we are today noticing the revival of the spirit of Ghengis Khan in the present expansionist policies.

If "Realist" implies that there may be a military invasion by land through Nepal or Assam then I must say that this kind of venture would be foolhardy. It seems to me quite clear, considering all the topographical and physical factors involved that such invasion from the Tibetan mainland would be a colossal military blunder and Red China would never adopt such a course of action. The mighty Himalayas are a barrier.

But there are several possibilities which India cannot afford to neglect. Though India is not directly vulnerable to military aggression from Tibet, China in her grand design may attack Burma through South Tibet and thus through Assam, India consequently can be threatened.

There is another danger. Indian Communists can have contacts with Lhasa, capital of Tibet. For at least 2500 years there have been three mountain passes, through Nepal, through Tehari Garval and through Assam to Tibet. These difficult and dangerous trade routes can be utilized for Communist infiltration.

Indeed, though "Passage to India" is not so wide open, there are several possibilities which threaten India in every sense of the term. Our statesmen and people should understand the implications of such disaster and make decisions in the context of the present and coming events.

Combat Boots

With reference to Mathew J. Miletich's letter "Clothing In Korea" of November 23, I am well aware of the so-called, celebrated combat boot right here in the United States. I certainly would like to meet the gentleman who devised the boot with the leather reversed. I'm sure he tried to shine a pair. During my basic training I was issued two pairs of the reversed leather boots. Regulations were that they had to be shined every day. It's hard to tell how many boxes of shoe polish and long hours I spent trying to shine them.

Every soldier likes to keep his boots shined and his feet dry. You can't do either one with the leather reversed.

Virginia Inspections

I presume you are trying to show in the articles by Sam Zagoria how "superior" the D. C. car inspection is compared with that in Virginia. Unfortunately, your experiment was too lopsided to prove anything. At least, that is my opinion. To make a fair comparison, why not send a car to each of the D. C. inspection stations, then to a like number in Virginia? I daresay you will find that none will agree.

The only point you really proved was that you had a car inspected at four different places, and that none of them agreed on the condition of your car.

Another experiment you could make is to compare, item by item, the points checked by the D. C. inspection stations with those checked in Virginia, then determine just how many of those in D. C. are really essential to the safety of your car. I believe you will find that a higher percentage of those in Virginia are essential than those in D. C. I have gone through both inspections, and I will take the Virginia verdict any time.

When I had my car inspected in D. C. I had to replace the muffler and exhaust system. Why? Not because it was defective, but because "it doesn't sound right," to use the words of the inspector. I asked another official at the station what was wrong with the muffler, and he replied, "Not a thing. That guy just tries to be tough." I was told very much the same thing at the garage where I had a new muffler installed. Do you call that fair and scientific inspecting? I certainly don't.

Resettlement of Arab Refugees

I have just returned from a mission to our troops in Japan and Korea (where I arrived when Seoul was recaptured), passing through the Middle East on my way home. With the living reality of the latter region still before my eyes, I find myself nonplussed by the recent reports in your columns of the uncompromising and vehement tone adopted by the Arab delegates in the United Nations debates on the Palestine refugee problem.

My first visit to Israel since partition took place last spring. In the few months that have elapsed since then, certain aspects of the situation by which I was originally impressed have become even more striking. The Israel of today bears no relation to the Palestine of the British mandate with its part Arab, part Jewish population, economy and culture. The home that the Arab refugees in their pitiful camps dream of is no longer in existence: the tides of invasion and war—Arab prompted, let us remember—not only scattered the Arab population of Palestine to the four winds, but changed the face of the country completely and irrevocably. It is a wholly Jewish country now with a few pockets of Arab population. Its laws, economy, and society are determined by its Jewish population and by the primary fact of its constant reception of more and more Jewish immigration. Repatriation to Israel for the Arab refugees would not—could not be—returning home.

This is a sad situation, which is equal in tragedy (though far surpassed in scope) to the other great refugee questions of our volcanic times. I refer to the plight of millions of eastern and central European displaced persons and to the 10 or more million Hindu and Moslem refugees whose lives were dislocated by the partition of India—and then, of course, the vast numbers of uprooted Koreans. Actually the Palestine refugee problem should be more manageable, because it is more limited than these others.

Too little attention has, I believe, been paid to the expert and understanding recommendations recently made by the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine in its report of October 23, 1950. The commission believes that "having the interests of the refugees themselves in mind," attention should be given to possibilities of resettlement in the Arab countries, financed by payment of compensation for the property of non-returning refugees.

It believes, of course, that the refugees who wish to return to Israel should be enabled to do so; but it stresses the fact that the refugees "should be afforded every opportunity to realize that the conditions which they would find on returning to their homes would differ greatly from those to which they were accustomed." Hence, far from advocating repatriation as the chief and best solution, the commission proposes only "the return of that number of refugees to Israel which would be consistent with their own best interests" and emphasizes the need for governmental and United Nations aid towards resettlement.

We should be acting more humanely towards the Arab refugees if we attempted to carry out a common-sense solution along the lines recommended by the United Nations Conciliation Commission. If, as seems evident, a radical readjustment in their lives is the best way out, it would be well that it were done quickly: that the nightmare existence of idleness, wretchedness, indecision, and false illusions be ended and a more healthy and constructive existence begun with the cooperation of men and agencies of good will.

Reexamination Necessary

By Andre Visson

New Trends Abroad

WHETHER the Administration likes it or not, and whether our policy makers are willing to admit it or not, signs are multiplying that in the coming months it may become necessary to revise America's approach to many foreign political and military issues.

This may become necessary not because of the Republican gains in the last elections but because of the latest trends abroad. The French insist on the Schuman Plan as a precondition to the establishment of a European army with German contingents. The German voters, according to recent elections in two German states in the United States zone, reject any German rearmament unless and until Americans have increased their military strength in western Europe and Germany is given complete equality with all other western European nations. And in Britain there is a growing urge for greater British independence from the United States both in foreign and military policies.

In principle, American policy makers welcome any manifestation of independent spirit in western Europe. The American people have neither the need, the liking, nor the desire for any "satellites" whether in Europe or in Asia. The American objective is to see all free nations in the world strong and independent. But American policy makers are deeply convinced—and rightly so—that such strength can come only through teamwork. And, unfortunately, the latest trends in western Europe do not contribute to the strengthening of the North Atlantic team, the establishment of which was to have been the primary objective for us as well as for our friends in western Europe.

ALL members of the North Atlantic group agree in principle that teamwork is the key to their survival. But when it comes to making up the team, each nation appears to have its own conception of the way it should work. And what is worse, too many people seem to forget that in order to make the Atlantic team work, they need to give as much as they are eager to take.

The establishment of the North Atlantic group is based on the assumption that provided certain conditions are fulfilled and the indispensable time is available western Europe can be defended. The Joint Chiefs of Staff reached this conclusion a year ago, after an exhaustive study of the problem. They are not in a position to give a foolproof guarantee for the defense of western Europe. But they have reasonable hope that there is still time available.

They are convinced, however, that western Europe can be defended only if western Europeans and we make the best possible use of the time which is still ours. Should they be wrong in their estimate of the time element, or should we and western Europe fail to make the effort expected of us, the defense of western Europe will prove impossible and the time, effort and money spent in the establishment of the North Atlantic team will have been wasted.

The risk is certainly there, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff are certainly aware of it. Gen. Omar N. Bradley has all along been thinking and speaking in terms of "calculated risk." And the whole concept of collective balanced forces is based on the acceptance of the "calculated risk."

NOW, a paradoxical trend is developing in European thinking. Since the end of the war Europeans have been anxious to receive assurances from the United States that Europe would be defended. But having received these assurances, many Europeans seem to fear that American rearmament may precipitate a new world war. They applauded the American determination, under the United Nations banner, to stop the Communist aggression in Korea. But they shiver at the thought that American military forces along the Yalu River may bring on a war against Communist China.

They want communism to be contained in Asia, and especially in Europe. But they abhor any move which might bring armed action against Communist forces. This is understandable. They realize that should war come within the next two years, it would find western Europe practically defenseless. Furthermore, western Europeans who have just gotten back on their feet fear that the rearmament effort expected of them may shatter their economy and wipe out the recovery of the last two years. This is another reason behind the British clamor for greater military independence. Three British cabinet members—Health Minister Aneurin Bevan, Supply Minister George Strauss and War Minister John Strachey—are reported to be willing to refuse American military aid in order to be free to spend less on British rearmament.

British officials in Washington have been assuring our officials at the State Department and at the Pentagon that the views of the three above-mentioned cabinet members do not represent the British official view. But they cannot deny that there is in Britain a growing clamor for greater political and military independence.

In view of this trend and of the misconceptions by both the French and the Germans regarding the roles they are being called on to play in the defense of Europe, it is becoming increasingly likely that American policy makers may find themselves compelled to reexamine their approach to the crucial problem of the defense of Europe.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

'Points' Don't Save Reservists

By Drew Pearson

THE ARMY is having a tough time sending quick replacements to Korea. But in trying to solve the problem, the Army is breaking promises to a large number of Army reservists who signed up in good faith, but who are now shipped off to Korea with only a 21-day "refresher" course, and regardless of the point system.

At Fort Lewis, Wash., chief embarkation point for Korea, 10,000 enlisted reserves are now being trained for replacements in Korea. Officially, they are not supposed to be shipped if they have enough points, based upon service in World War II, previous overseas duty, etc.

This is the official Army announcement made on October 28 and supposedly effective the next day. However, as of today, a month later, it isn't being carried out. Brig. Gen. LeRoy H. Watson, hard-working commanding officer of Fort Lewis, when queried by this column, bluntly replied:

"We don't go by any point system. We were told to determine the number of points each man had. We added up the score like a problem in arithmetic and sent the results to higher headquarters. We have no further instructions. I can't do anything about the point system unless I get orders from Sixth Army Headquarters."

General Watson definitely has a tough problem. The fact remains that many reservists had no battle experience in World War II, and some never even fired a weapon. Yet they are being shipped off to Korea after no more than a 21-day refresher course.

Reservists also get no furloughs. General Watson pointed out that he has these men for only 21 days and cannot afford to let them off. If they are stuck at Fort Lewis beyond 21 days, he simply continues their training "for their own good."

Draftees, on the other hand, get prolonged training and aren't so rushed, so they get long furloughs. This has led to low morale among reservists and Uncle Sam is going to have a hard time persuading many of them to go back to the Army in the future.

I WAS BRAGGING the other night about my cow, Betty, which recently scored top production honors in Montgomery County, when Judge Marvin Jones of the United States Court of Claims, formerly chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, told a story about a couple of other cows.

They loomed large at one time in the life of Henry C. Wallace, father of former Vice President Henry A. Wallace. Henry C. Wallace was Republican Secretary of Agriculture in the Cabinet of Warren G. Harding, whereas his son, Henry A. Wallace, was Secretary of Agriculture in the Democratic Cabinet of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Both came from Iowa and both professed to know something about cows.

But during Harding's Administration, Congressman Magnus Johnson of Minnesota delivered a tirade against Henry C. Wallace, claiming that the Secretary knew nothing about farming, and to prove it he challenged Wallace to a milking contest.

Wallace accepted the challenge. Two cows were brought to the foot of the Capitol, where a large group of Congressmen watched the Gentleman from Minnesota and the Secretary of Agriculture compete to see which could get the most milk out of his cow in the quickest time. Johnson appeared to be winning at first, but in the end Wallace beat him.

What Wallace never knew, however, was that the contest was rigged. His associates in the Agriculture Department figured that it would never do for the Secretary to be defeated in a milking contest, so they picked two cows, apparently identical.

Actually, however, one cow was accustomed to being milked three times a day, whereas the other cow was milked only twice a day. And Magnus Johnson was given the three-times-a-day milker.

Having been milked just a short time before, she naturally did not produce the same amount of milk as the Secretary's cow.

THE MUNITIONS BOARD isn't advertising it, but if the Korean war drags on through the winter the manufacture of wool suits and dresses for civilians may have to be curtailed somewhat.

The blunt facts are that the Munitions Board had not stockpiled a single bale of wool, while the Agriculture Department's wool stocks are exhausted.

Last year, the Agriculture Department had plenty of wool, much of it sold as surplus, but it couldn't get the Munitions Board to take it over for stockpiling.

Note—Another thing the Army forgot to provide for is winter oil. As a result, jeeps in Korea are still lubricated with summer-grade oil, which is one reason there has been a lot of jeep trouble at the front.

IT LOOKS as though President Truman is going to relent and appoint an American Ambassador to Franco Spain.

Last week, Stanton Griffis called at the White House to hand in his resignation as Ambassador to Argentina. As he did so, he put in a vigorous bid for the coveted job of Ambassador to France. The President, however, said no.

This caused Griffis, who started out as a greenhorn but has wound up doing an A-1 job in Argentina, to complain about as forcefully as it is possible to complain to the President. He pointed out that he had gone down the line for the Democratic Party financially in 1948 and had also ponied up for the Democratic campaign in 1950. Furthermore, he reminded the President that he had gone to town for the Democrats in Connecticut.

Griffis, a highly successful businessman, chief owner of Brentano's book stores and a heavy stockholder in Paramount motion pictures, is also a pretty good salesman. But the President remained unmoved. He replied that he could not give him the coveted ambassadorship to France.

Finally, however, the President said that if Griffis would go off and rest for two or three months, he could have the next important ambassadorial opening, namely, the job of representing the United States in Spain.

REAL REASON Senator Robert Taft is knifing his peppery GOP colleague, Wayne Morse of Oregon, is a tough speech the latter made two months ago.

Speaking before the AFL, Morse described Taft's chief pride, the Taft-Hartley law, as "an act of legislative hypocrisy" devised with the help of Dixiecrats to prevent the unionizing of the South.

As a result, Taft and his "re-examinist" colleagues are determined to keep Morse off the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, despite a firm commitment by the Republican Senate Conference to give the Oregon Senator the next vacancy on this committee.

DR. LIVINGSTONE, WE PRESUME?

Our Political Economy

Inflation 'Controls' Contradict

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

CAN PAY-AS-YOU-GO taxation head off inflation as we step up our defense program to more than 50 billion dollars a year?

Current tax testimony on the Hill reflects a dangerous confusion on this score. Somehow the idea has become general that we can rearm without inflation of we do two things: (1) cut down consumer spending through taxes and (2) simultaneously expand our industrial capacity by heavy investment in new plant and equipment.

These two notions are in large part contradictory. New investment generates income and consumer spending. That the two ideas could bloom together is a tribute to the present confused state of our defense thinking.

Heavy taxes are deflationary and may release some resources for defense use, it is true, but to deflate civilian consumption will not by itself stop runaway prices. As for the second program—capital investment—it is our greatest potential source of inflation, and it cannot really be controlled by taxes.

LET US SEE why this is so. We must first make a clear distinction in our minds between the consumer and the investment sectors of the economy.

Consumers are not the only ones who bid for goods. Last year we put 33.5 billion dollars into private investment—new construction, producers' durable equipment, inventory changes and so forth.

Here is an enormous field where inflation could run riot without additional consumer buying. If many businesses decided to invest now in new plants, machines or commercial buildings, they could bid against each other and against defense plants for manpower and materials.

In fact, unless we recognize the danger, this is very likely to occur. All the storm flags are flying.

Business anticipates rising prices and big defense expenditures which may continue for years. This puts most companies in the psychological mood to expand.

Many corporations have enormous liquid reserves. Even those which do not, have access to credit. There is, in short, no serious financial barrier to present expansion of investment demand. On the other hand, there is virtually no unemployment. Materials are critically short. Plant and equipment are being used to capacity.

INTO THIS explosive situation let us put a defense order for, say, 100 million dollars in military aircraft.

Aluminum is in short supply, so aluminum capacity will have to be increased; a new plant is required. To build this demands steel and cement, so the steel and cement industries must expand. These in turn require new coal and iron capacity, which can only be met by new mining machinery, railroad cars and barges.

The whole 100 million dollar plane program may be paid for in taxes. In fact, tax yields may be several times this amount. The widening circle of demand will generate billions of dollars in additional investment outlays for everything from construction materials to transportation.

Nor will the spiral stop here. Industries desiring to expand will bid up wages and materials. Higher wages will in turn find their way into consumers' pockets, generating new demands and still higher prices.

That is why pay-as-you-go taxes — whether personal or corporate—will not do the job alone. To hold prices in line, taxes would not only have to match Government defense spending, they would have to be much higher than the outlay for arms. Such a program would be as unlikely as it would be politically unpalatable.

IF WE REALLY want to hold the line, we shall need to adopt at least two other controls: (1) to ration business credit as we are now rationing consumer credit; and (2) to allocate materials, not by some rule-of-thumb (everybody use 35 per cent less aluminum, for example), but according to a specific definition of national needs.

Such measures will arouse loud protests against what will be called "discrimination." But discrimination is precisely what is needed. Today we are discriminating, not too much, but too little.

The 33 billion dollar investment sector of our economy presents an opportunity as well as a challenge. It gives us room to maneuver—to reshape and redirect our economy to defense needs.

But unless we watch it sharply, we may miss our great chance and instead find ourselves embarked on a roaring program of unselective and inflationary capital investment.

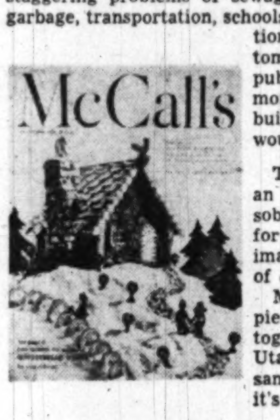
YOU DON'T MAKE a professional man out of every real estate agent "merely by calling him a realtor," bristles Robert Moses, the New York park and housing authority, in a crackling article in the Atlantic Monthly. Aiming a haymaker at fly-by-night land speculation, Moses describes how somebody gets out a brochure and sets up a development in which "the lots turn out to average less than 4000 square feet; the streets are narrow and are laid out in gridiron patterns; the houses are mere cabins, and what was once a pleasant bit of nature has been ruthlessly leveled and ripped up to make a subdivider's holiday."

Then, Moses continues, "the developer and his drums depart. There remain for bewildered taxpayers and frightened local officials staggering problems of sewage, water supply, drainage, lighting, garbage, transportation, schools, playgrounds, fire and police protection, health, hospitals, in the slums of tomorrow." If we, he says, "were to publish reliable, simply written, common-sense information to control the building boom, what a country this would be!"



THE GINGERBREAD HOUSE here is an item featured in McCall's, which soberly maintains that you can make it for your children "easily, perfectly and imaginatively." There are pictures and, of course, a recipe.

McCall's also carries a documented piece about the herring salad thrown together by Mrs. G. L. Becker of Ogden, Utah. This department happens to have sampled that salad and can say that it's every inch a creation.

AS ANY FOOL knows (and will usually tell you), the dollar is worth only 59 cents. But the defense dollar, Marshall Andrews of The Washington Post points out in Ordnance, is now worth just 33 cents, compared to the full dollar of 1939. In other words, Andrews says, "the soldier, sailor and airman who cost the taxpayer $3300 a year in 1939 on the basis of overall expenditures per man, cost $10,000 in 1949." The reasons for this, Andrews says, are the general rise in the cost of living, "the increasing tendency of politicians in general and of Congress in particular to purchase public favor with public funds," the effort to duplicate in the services the high civilian standard of living, and changed conditions of warfare, which "have demanded weapons of such increased complexity that the cost of a 1949 weapon may be 10 or 15 times that of its more modest 1939 counterpart."

As an example of the last-named, Andrews gives you the heavy bomber: the old B-17 cost about $200,000. "Its 1949 equivalent, the B-36, costs about 3½ million dollars, or nearly 20 times as much."

THE COP WHO SAVES KIDS' LIVES is the title of a story about Richard Mansfield, the honorary Washington police inspector, in the Saturday Evening Post. It is written by Ernest L. Barcella and the title just about tells the tale.

YOU KNOW it's Christmas time because of the rash of red-hot titles that has broken out. Helene Wright has written a piece for Good Housekeeping called "Christmas Presence." And Emily Kimbrough checks into McCall's with one entitled "The Plight Before Christmas."

EVER THINK of fasting? Alan Moyle in Health Culture says fasting not only shampoos the bloodstream but also "paves the way for clear thinking; it demonstrates that self-will does exist and begets confidence in the ability to perform useful functions."

IF YOU'RE WONDERING about Hopalong Cassidy (and what 6-year-old isn't?), this is your week. Both Time and Coronet are carrying the clear feedbox material on the latest national institution.

Coronet also has a story by Olive Clapper about widows. Find out how to do something, Mrs. Clapper advises women, before you get to be a widow, and the path will be easier.

ONE REAL DANGER to the United States is "that the free world will split up and we will find ourselves practically isolated," says Ernest K. Lindley in Newsweek. "Our diplomacy will have to be resourceful and delicate as well as courageous to avert disastrous fissions in the free world during the next few weeks," Lindley declares, adding that it might be a good idea if "President Truman would call together the congressional leaders of both parties, impress upon them the ominous possibilities, and seek their understanding and advice."

YOUR CHRISTMAS TREE, like the GI pants you got in the war, comes in two sizes—too large and too small, Charles S. Walters notes in the American Home. Get a tree, Walters says, that's "symmetrically conical with a distinct tip or leader, not too long, but an upstanding, crowning point for that favorite star, angel or Santa Claus figure. Its foliage should be dense, compact and rich green color. If it brings with it that characteristic north-woods fragrance, so much the better. The leaves or needles are abundant and attractive—not stiff or sharp enough to make it hard to decorate the tree, or unpleasant to touch it . . . and, most important, they should not fall soon after the tree is brought indoors, leaving ugly, bare twigs."

TRUE has a piece about guess what—the University of California football team. Dick Hyland, the old Stanford halfback, and Keith Monroe wrote it.

Also in True is an article by MacKinlay Kantor called "Two Cops of the Twenty-Third." That would be the 23d New York police precinct, and Kantor spent 15 months riding with the cops to dig up material for a book and this article. It is fast and factual.

GORDON DEAN, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, questioned by U. S. News and World Report about printing a picture of the atomic bomb, replied, "I think it will be some time before we feel we can afford to do it, but I visualize the day when that information in itself would be so unimportant that you would be willing to put a dummy model in Macy's window."

FORBES magazine finds that "executive mortality" is taking a greater toll in business than it ought to, and has asked Dr. Anthony Sindoni, jr., of Philadelphia what to do about it. Dr. Sindoni said you do four things: You develop the proper attitude toward your job; you don't consider yourself indispensable; you avoid annoying details, and you get away from it all as frequently as possible.

QUENTIN REYNOLDS looks back in Redbook to the night of May 10, 1941, "the night England was saved. That was the night the backbone of the Nazi airforce was broken."

Matter of Fact

Full-Scale War Goes 'Unnoticed'

The following column was written before the French National Assembly acted on Indo-China.

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

IT IS A PECULIAR COMMENTARY on these times that a war on a large scale can be fought without attracting more than the most casual attention. The fact is that, almost unnoticed, the whole character of the fighting in Indo-China has changed. What was until quite recently an indecisive guerilla campaign has now been transformed into regular warfare, and major battles are now going on between French troops and the Communist forces of former Comintern agent Ho Chi Minh.

Indo-China is a distant and unlikely country which most people would have difficulty in identifying on a map. Yet what is now going on there has a very real meaning to this country. For the French are losing the war which is now in progress. And if the French continue to lose, the United States will sooner or later be faced with the choice of sending American soldiers to Indo-China or risking the loss of all Southeast Asia.

Until recently, Ho Chi Minh's Communists constantly harassed the French, but they always avoided open battle. In other words, they behaved as guerillas should. Now they are no longer behaving like guerillas. They are behaving like a regular army.

Guerillas can never force a final decision, because they can never finally defeat an enemy. But a regular army can force a decision. This is what Ho Chi Minh's newly organized army is trying to do, by achieving the final defeat of the French army in Indo-China and thus completing the conquest of Indo-China.

THE TRANSFORMATION of Ho's guerilla bands into a regular army has taken place in a number of training camps organized by the Chinese Communists on the Chinese side of the border. According to the best estimates, upward of 140,000 men have been trained and organized on a divisional basis in these camps.

This army has been supplied with all the weapons (mostly American) necessary for regular open warfare, including heavy artillery. Ho's new army has shown that it is trained to use these weapons efficiently. Moreover, airstrips are now being constructed in territory under Ho's control, which of course means that Ho will soon have airpower at his disposal.

Ho's army has already proved that the French "strong points" along the border were really weak points, and one after another the French border fortifications have fallen. The important port of Haiphong, the major city of Hanoi and the whole vital rice-growing Red River Delta are now seriously menaced.

The French reaction to these defeats has been one of the few bright spots in the whole dark picture. Only a few weeks ago, the French were hinting broadly that they were getting ready to abandon Indo-China to its Communist fate. Now the French government is preparing to reinforce its 150,000-man army in Indo-China with at least 25,000 specialists in artillery, tank and air combat. About half the French fleet is also to be sent to Indo-China, to blockade the part of the coast held by Ho Chi Minh.

WHAT IS in the long run more important, the French now seem to be ready to face the real facts of their political situation. The essential fact is that there can be no military solution in Indo-China as long as the mass of the intensely nationalist population supports Ho Chi Minh. For as long as this is so, Communist guerillas based on the population can offer Ho's newly organized conventional army the margin of eventual victory.

Both French High Commissioner Pignon in Indo-China, and French Foreign Minister Schuman in Paris, have recognized this. Accordingly, bar a last-minute change of heart, the French are now preparing to offer Indo-China real independence on a definite timetable, with a large nationalist army under the independent command of Indo-Chinese Emperor Bao Dai progressively taking over from French troops the task of fighting Ho Chi Minh's Communists.

The target is a 200,000-man nationalist Indo-Chinese army, to be created within 18 months. This army will be very largely armed with American weapons. Already far more has been allocated to Indo-China out of Military Aid Program funds than most people realize—the figure is still secret, but it is reliably reported to approach a third of a billion dollars.

Even so, the best that can be hoped for in Indo-China is a long-drawn-out civil war, which can have no final end as long as the Chinese Communists actively support their Indo-Chinese comrades. And the worst, rather than the best, may still happen—a decisive defeat of the French army in Indo-China, before any effective nationalist force can be organized.

If and when this happens, the United States will be faced with a terrible choice. We could try to hold Indo-China with American troops, which could have disastrous effects, politically and strategically. Or we could abandon Indo-China, the key to Southeast Asia, to its fate. This would mean in effect that we had lost the war in the Pacific, the war which only so recently we fought so long and hard to win.

Japs Rejoice Over SCAP 'Gifts'

of 10,090 of Japan's 202,000 purgees.

The purge of militarists and ultra-nationalists was described by SCAP officials as the single most important step in carrying out the objectives of the occupation. Now, without waiting for a peace treaty, unpurging has begun.

Actually, it was not so much the names on the list that disturbed observers (though some of those included had been prominent backers of Japanese militarism and some were career army officers), as the way the unpurging was done.

A Japanese government appeal commission examined 32,000 claims for unpurging and recommended that 10,090 persons be removed from the purge list. This recommendation was submitted to Premier Yoshida, who forwarded it to General MacArthur. The Supreme Commander turned over the list to subordinates for examination and report. He was informed in due course that GHQ did not have the facilities for "screening" more than 10,000 persons and that the Japanese recommendations should therefore be accepted. This was done, thus making the Japanese ruling class the final arbiter on who should be unpurged now and who should wait until later.

There was great joy among the soldiers, politicians, diplomats, journalists, financiers and the rest over their return to public life, and geisha parties blossomed in Tokyo's entertainment quarters in celebration. Since then, a further 3000 junior army and navy officers, who had received their commissions in the last weeks before Japan's surrender, have similarly been unpurged.

MANY foreign observers viewed the mass unpurging as marking the end of the attempt to transform Japan into something that nation wasn't before. They also believed it meant that few of the changes made by the occupation authorities in the past five years will remain in existence five years hence.

An unusually confiding Japanese government official summed it up to me by saying, "We have got back almost to prewar Japan, with trade unions again under control, a crackdown on Communists, a Japanese army on the way and no serious opposition in sight to our ruling class."

This is not to imply that MacArthurian (and FEC) policies are necessarily wrong. Japan, with 84 million of the most energetic and advanced people in the Orient, was always certain to make a comeback. This highly disciplined nation is equally capable of being a ruthless aggressor or a good neighbor. The Japanese were dependable allies of Britain in the days of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty. They may well prove equally dependable allies of the United States and upholders of United Nations ideals in the future. It all depends on whom, within Japan, is giving the orders.

BUT ONE THING is certain: The price the Yoshidas will put upon Japanese friendship won't be cheap.

Discussing a Japanese peace treaty, a Japanese nationalist, after remarking that "a unique occupation should be followed by a unique peace treaty," told me that no peace would achieve its objective of a more settled Far East which did not restore to Japan territory and resources equivalent to those she possessed in 1941!

Another Tokyo politician put it even more bluntly: "The Western Allies won't dare to put any unpleasant clauses in the peace treaty because they know if they did we would promptly switch to the Russian side."

Statements like these leave some observers with the feeling that just possibly it would have been wiser to keep a few "gifts" in reserve until Japan's ruling class had given more solid guarantees of good intentions than it has done so far.

District Affairs

Laggard Justice Puzzles the Layman

By Harry N. Stull

THE AVERAGE District citizen, who has had little or no experience in our courts, is not clear as to the division of authority between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government in the judiciary here, especially in regard to criminal procedure.

STULL

The picture which tends to confuse is that the Juvenile and Municipal Courts and the Municipal Court of Appeals are purely local bodies, while the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and the United States Court of Appeals are essentially Federal, but handle some cases that are local in their nature. Further complicating the situation is the fact that certain crimes set forth in the District Code are offenses against the District of Columbia and are within the jurisdiction of the Corporation Counsel's office, whereas other offenses are Federal and within the matters handled by the District Attorney's office.

Costs and revenues of the District Court and the Court of Appeals are divided between the District and Federal Governments. All judges, both District and Federal, are appointed by the President, with confirmation by the Senate, and all juries are selected from residents of the District of Columbia. Aside from its purely legal duties, the District Court is charged with appointing members of the Board of Education of the District.

The average layman has great respect for the judiciary, even when some of its decisions appear to be contrary to public opinion and not in conformity with what he has been led to believe is the law. One thing the lay citizen cannot understand, however, is delay in trials, numerous postponements when swiftness of punishment is one of the most effective deterrents of crime. It was reported recently that a drunk driving case had been postponed 14 times and still had not been tried.

There is also a realization that such delays wear down prosecuting witnesses, clog the dockets and generally affect public confidence in the administration of the law.

THE PLANS for decentralization or dispersal of Government agencies are important from the standpoint of civic Washington. The suggestions involve the moving of entire departments of Government 20 or 30 miles from this city. They contemplate the drawing of plans and the erection of buildings on sites not yet selected, and the acquisition of land for the purpose. This, of course, means that even if the plans are approved by the new Congress, a considerable time must elapse before the actual moving can be done.

These plans seem to conflict with the long-considered program of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission to acquire the property east of the Capitol for public building sites. This calls for the acquisition of all the property in the area bounded by B st. ne., B st. se., the Capitol and the Anacostia River. Use of this location, only a short distance from the present Federal triangle, would further centralize Federal activities and create another congested area, which, it appears, is what the dispersal plan is intended to avoid.

IN THE SETTING UP of civil defense, great stress is being laid on training. It has been pointed out that the first two hours following an attack are the most important, and the greater the number of trained persons who know what to do in this emergency, the more effective the service will be. Classes are already being formed for this purpose in the warden and other services, and these persons in turn will train others. Films that will shortly be available from the Department of Defense will be used for instruction in the character of the atomic bomb and its effects, and in atomic defense.

These films dispel certain misconceptions about the A-bomb. It is shown that radioactivity is not the bomb's greatest threat. Blast and heat are much greater dangers. Radioactivity alone would account for only a small percentage of deaths and injuries. It is also pointed out that radiation sickness is not always fatal. Even after a heavy dosage, there is a good chance for recovery.

SCC Goes Far Toward 'Welfare State'

By Benjamin Muse

THE State Corporation Commission is a whale of a commission. In fact, the Government of Virginia is divided into four powers: the legislative, the executive, the judiciary and the SCC.

MUSE

The Constitution provides that "the legislative, judicial and executive departments shall be separate and distinct"—"except as hereinafter provided"—and "hereinafter" it sets up the State Corporation Commission.

What few people realize, moreover, is that, within the territory which it covers, the SCC is just a little to the right of socialism. Don't get me wrong. This column is for the SCC. But, in a quiet way, the operation of the SCC is about as good an example of regimentation as can be found in this country.

It was established by the Constitution of 1902, when the Nation was in a dither over the power exercised by the railroads and the "trusts," and Teddy Roosevelt's trust-busting crusade was in full swing. The Constitution-makers were determined to keep trusts under control in Virginia, and they set up what was then, and still is, the most powerful regulatory commission in America.

It presides at the birth, merger and death of corporations. It walks behind them as they go through life. If a corporation disobeys its orders, it can hale it into court, try it, fine it $500 per day of violation and collect the fine.

UNDER THE CONSTITUTION, it has "the power" and "the duty of supervising, regulating and controlling all transportation and transmission companies doing business in this State." It fixes "rates, charges, classifications of traffic and rules and regulations," and sees that companies "establish and maintain all such public service facilities and conveniences as may be reasonable and just."

It is required "to examine all the railroads and the works and equipment thereof and keep itself informed as to their physical condition and the manner in which they are operated." It spends a great deal of time telling railroads whether or not they may close down a station or take off a passenger train. If a railroad can't reach an agreement with town and Highway Department, it decides when a grade crossing must be eliminated.

Through its Motor Transportation and Motor Carrier Taxation Divisions, it devotes a lot of attention to bus and trucking companies. Their books are audited, and inspectors are kept on the highways to see that they comply with all the laws and pay all the taxes. Under a smart law, which requires common carriers to buy as much fuel in Virginia as they use in Virginia, it is collecting nearly five million dollars a year of taxes from out-of-State carriers which might otherwise have been lost to this State.

It regulates public utility companies in a big way. They cannot issue stocks or bonds without its permission. It controls rates and standards of service. It keeps a constant check on their books to see that they are not earning too much money. They must have "certificates of public convenience and necessity" in order to stay in business, to go into business or to expand their business.

IT EXAMINES the books of insurance companies and passes upon the intelligence and character of their agents. Its Fire Marshal investigates cases of suspected insurance arson. It examines banks and keeps them under control—also air transportation and bottled gas companies.

It lays down the regulations for fire protection in theaters, hotels and other places of public gathering. Then, if it has any time left, under Section 56-325 of the Code of Virginia, it inspects the toilet facilities in the bus terminals.

It is quite a big chunk of the Welfare State, and we have had it a long time. The curious thing is that, here in conservative Virginia, we like it. In fact, we're proud of it. But we think that is going about far enough in the direction of paternalism—except, maybe—just maybe—in one other area:

Has anyone ever thought of a State Labor Union Commission?

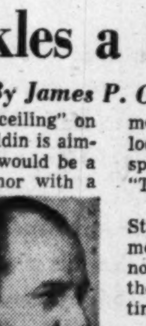
McKeldin Tackles a Herculean Task

By James P. Connolly

IN DETERMINING to try to put a "ceiling" on the State budget, Governor-elect McKeldin is aiming high. The task he has set himself would be a difficult one for a Democratic Governor with a Democratic Legislature. For a Republican Governor with a Democratic Legislature, it promises to be doubly difficult.



CONNOLLY

The Legislature well might figure that, if there is to be any budget reform, it had better be in a Democratic administration, when the Democrats could claim full credit.

Also, certain State agencies and departments subsisting in whole or in part on dedicated revenues enjoy a liberal feature of the present budget plan and would hardly welcome any change—less so any proposed by a Republican, Republicans being rather passing in the executive office. Only three have been elected Governor in Maryland and none was reelected.

A Republican budget improvement might be more lasting. But, on the record, opponents would have ground for reasoning that if the "danger" could be averted for four years it would be safely past.

WHEN McKELDIN speaks of a "ceiling" on the budget, what he has in mind is no fixed figure at low level. On that score the Legislature, accustomed to rubber-stamping Democratic budgets, might be only too happy to chop a Republican specimen down to sandwich size.

No, what the Governor-elect has in mind in the way of a "ceiling" is a hard and fast single budget that would make all agencies and departments keep their expenditures within their budget appropriations, whatever the appropriations might be—and that, citizens and tax dodgers, would be true magic.

The liberal feature of the budget enjoyed by certain agencies and departments subsisting in whole or in part on dedicated revenues, is that they are permitted to expend all their receipts, even though the receipts exceed their budget estimates and allotments.

Many criticisms are made of the current budget system, but that is one of the major complaints—and Governor-elect McKeldin is not the severest critic. That role is taken by the Commission on Governmental Efficiency and Economy, which has been condemning the budget system or the lack of it for lo these many years—13, to be exact.

THE COMMISSION is a nonpolitical, nonprofit survey group, supported by Baltimore businessmen and taxpayers, for the purpose of keeping local government costs and taxes at sub-stratosphere level. In a bulletin last February, entitled, "Toward a Real State Budget," it said in part:

"Since 1937 this commission has been urging the State to improve its budgetary and accounting methods. For the State, the term budget is a misnomer. . . . No matter what the budget figures are, the amount available for spending is changing continuously as the year proceeds."

According to the commission, in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1949, the amount changed by more than $41,000,000.

The commission's No. 1 criticism of the budget is that it never is closed. The Governor submits his budget to the Legislature early in the session and later sends in one or more supplemental budgets. The original appropriations are subject to change by the supplements, some supplemental allotments are dependent on new revenue measures and, finally, after the budget has been approved and the Legislature has scattered, budget items may be switched from time to time and purpose to purpose by the Board of Public Works.

The upshot, according to the E. & E. Commission, is confusion and bewilderment "because the budget is not a consolidated document of finality." Every dollar is accounted for eventually, but it is not possible to know the State's spending limit for the year until the year is gone.

THE E. & E. COMMISSION makes two main recommendations: Consolidation of all budget requests in one legislative bill, and "application of ceilings" on expenditures, even though dedicated revenues exceed estimates and appropriations.

Such recommendations are easier made than carried out. Governor-elect McKeldin has talked with leaders of the E. & E. Commission and has been promised their help and support. He plans to name a special commission to study the problem. Somewhat the same proposal was made by the Legislature a few years ago, but, as the E. & E. Commission says—a little wistfully—"nothing was done."

This mention of the political roadblocks in the way of budget reform is not meant to discourage the Governor-elect's good intentions or imply that his ambition is hopeless or impossible. The intent is only to assess the odds.

The odds on the early line are long. But if the Governor-elect can work the miracle in spite of them, the greater the gain and the glory.

On the other hand, if the Governor-elect's good intentions come to naught—well, you know the old proverb about the paving on the road to you know where.

BOOKS

Winston Churchill with Joseph Stalin, at Moscow in 1942

'The End of the Beginning'

The Best of Winnie's Memoirs

By Ferdinand Kuhn

THE HINGE OF FATE. By Winston S. Churchill. 1000 pp. Houghton Mifflin. $6.

WINSTON CHURCHILL led a charmed life at the climax of the war. Once his aircraft almost caught fire on an ocean crossing; once, a "thousand miles from anywhere," 7000 feet above the sea, he felt "a sudden shock and bump" in the middle of the night when a bolt of lightning hit his plane.

As he was leaving Baltimore in 1942, after his second visit to President Roosevelt, a plainclothesman guarding him was arrested fingering a pistol and muttering threats to kill him.

These were breathtaking escapes, yet none was as amazing as Churchill's survival into old age, through all the accumulated perils of brandy and black cigars, to write his wartime story. One would have to go far back into literature to find another writer in his seventies as tough and as durable.

Bernard Shaw was beginning his magnificent dotage when he wrote "The Apple Cart" at 74; Lloyd George finished his quarrelsome memoirs at 75. But here is Churchill, 76 next Thursday, turning out this volume which shows his intellectual powers unimpaired.

Only one of the four war volumes was more dramatic in its subject matter—the second, which told the deathless story of "Their Finest Hour." The third, on "The Grand Alliance," showed traces of slipshod work. But this one is brimful of action, anecdote, and of history told for the first time. In content and style, it is by all odds the best volume of the monumental series.

"THE HINGE OF FATE" is Churchill's capsule description of what he called, in an earlier volume of speeches, "The End of the Beginning." It covers the 18 months from the Japanese attack on Malaya to the eve of the Allied assault on Sicily. In this period, Churchill writes, "we turn from almost uninterrupted disaster to almost unbroken success." The tide of disaster rolled over Singapore and the Indies to the very gates of India; it was rolled back at Midway, El Alamein and Stalingrad, and it became a tide of victory in Tunisia.

The turning hinge is not a bad analogy, but the word "fate" in the title suggests something passive and foreordained. Certainly there was nothing passive about the conduct of the war on either side in this tremendous time. Allied exertions and enemy blunders had at least as much to do with the change as the workings of fate. And surely one of the forces that had most to do with it was the dynamo inside Winston Churchill.

He seemed to pop up everywhere in those days—in Washington, Gibraltar, Cairo, and in Moscow for his first encounters with Stalin. He passed through Frederick, Maryland, on a trip with Roosevelt in 1943, and astonished his host by reciting the whole of "Barbara Frietchie," which he had learned from his American mother. He inspected his troops in the western desert, and later addressed them from the ruins of ancient Carthage. If he could not visit every battlefront, he at least energized the Allied effort everywhere. He was the scourge of the indolent and the hidebound, and his ministers probably found him an unmitigated nuisance.

WHEN IT SEEMED impossible to supply Malta by convoy, he thought of sending goods by submarine. When it looked as if the Japanese might take Ceylon, he spurred the Admiralty to set up a secret naval base at Addu Atoll, 600 miles to the southwest in the Indian Ocean, where the fleet would be safe from marauders. From his "war room" in Downing st., he sent a stream of "minutes" to his harassed ministers, fussing with them about anything and everything that flashed across his restless mind. Whatever his defects as a leader, he understood Clemenceau's dictum that war was too important to leave to the generals.

It is odd that a fighter like Churchill should be so charitable in fixing the blame for past disasters. He was "staggered" to discover, a month before it surrendered, that Singapore had no landward defenses, but he takes the blame himself. He should have known, he should have asked, but "the possibility no more entered my mind than that of a battleship being launched without a bottom."

Looking back, he contents himself with calling it "remarkable" that the United States Navy made no plans for coastal convoy to avert the fearful sinkings off the Atlantic coast early in 1942. (Henry Stimson was much less gentle with the Navy in his own recollections.)

He just couldn't believe the news when he heard, at the White House, that Tobruk had fallen with its 33,000 men. "This was one of the heaviest blows that I can recall during the war," he writes. "Defeat is one thing, disgrace is another." But he is too generous to put all the blame on General Auchinleck, the British commander. "Some of the blame . . . undoubtedly falls on me and my colleagues," he tells us now, "for the unduly wide responsibilities assigned a year before to the Middle East command."

IF CHURCHILL is still bitter about anything, it is the stubbornness of the Australian Labor government in the six months that followed Pearl Harbor. The story has never been told so fully until now, and it suggests that Australia's Labor politicians were the greatest cross Churchill had to bear.

First the Prime Minister, John Curtin, complained that the evacuation of Singapore would be an "inexcusable betrayal;" the British promptly sent a precious division into the Malayan trap. Then, when the British pleaded for Australian help, Curtin refused to let a homeward-bound division be diverted to Burma while the Japanese were advancing on Rangoon.

Churchill's verdict is that the Australians let the rigidities of "local politics" paralyze "the common effort." He tries to be cool about it, but he smoulders with anger even now.

Inevitably, much of this fourth volume tells of the high-level discussions of strategy that preceded the invasion of Northwest Africa in 1942. He insists that he approved of the so-called Darlan deal after the armies had landed, although he tells little about it that is new.

WHAT IS BRAND-NEW here, and in the nature of an apology, is Churchill's story of how Roosevelt came to announce the policy of "unconditional surrender" at Casablanca. Last year there was a debate in the House of Commons about it, and Churchill said that the first he had heard of the policy was when Roosevelt announced it at a press conference.

But now, after consulting his records, Churchill finds that he did send a message to his war cabinet in London about "unconditional surrender" three days before Roosevelt publicly used the words. He says the doctrine "was not disapproved in any way" by the war cabinet, and he himself does not go along with the present-day theory that it prolonged the war.

He had one spat with Roosevelt over India, but otherwise the President was one of his heroes. So was Harry Hopkins, and so, in an oddly assorted list of those he admired, were Stafford Cripps and Rommel, Smuts and Maisky, the Soviet Ambassador, and those two fine British soldiers, Gort and Alexander. And at the White House in June, 1942, long before the world knew of them, he met two Americans whom he came to respect and honor.

"WHEN WE WERE ALONE together after lunch (he writes), Harry [Hopkins] said to me, 'There are a couple of American officers the President would like you to meet, as they are very highly thought of in the Army.' At 5 o'clock, therefore, Major Generals Eisenhower and Clark were brought to my air-cooled room. I was immediately impressed by these remarkable but hitherto unknown men. They had both come from the President, whom they had just seen for the first time."

"Thus," he writes, "began a friendship which across all the ups and downs of war I have preserved with deep satisfaction to this day."

Churchill's fifth volume, which he is working on already, will tell of the invasion of Italy and of Clark's part in it; it will tell, too, of the preparations for Normandy and for Eisenhower's great moment at the center of the stage.

They say that Churchill wants more than anything else to become Prime Minister again. Maybe so; but nothing can add to his fame more surely than finishing his history, and giving it the care, the craftsmanship and the mastery of this fourth volume.

Notes on a Margin—A Napkin Margin

By Lee Grove

NOTES ON A DINNER NAPKIN in an Enormous Little Room, or a Dinner for E. E. Cummings—Everyone seems interested in new theory that Dorothy and William Wordsworth's relationship more involved than is commonly allowed brother and sister. (Where did Coleridge fit into this pattern?) . . . E. E. Cummings, slender, not as tall as had guessed. Wearing a pink shirt (Brooks Bros.?). Personality and appearance stamped with Harvard ('15). Still lives in Cambridge.

Francis Biddle, former Attorney General, finishing book on place of freedom of expression in world today . . . Wearing sporty shirt—that is Brooks Bros. . . . Mrs. Biddle (Katherine Garrison Chapin) still writing, but doesn't know when will have another book of poems. Last was 1942, "Plain-chant for America" . . . Cummings says takes time to accumulate poems for book. Says his 1950 book, containing 71 poems, most poems he's ever had in a single book.

Mrs. Marcella duPont has book of poems coming end of the month, "Sonnets and Lyrics." Her first book. Poems written over a period of years. Is great student of Emily Dickinson . . . Late Dixon Wector did introduction for her book . . . Huntington Cairns, host, kidded about having to inspect material imported by Kinsey for research, referred to Cairns by Customs. Cairns says hasn't opened packages with alleged pornographica. Doesn't have much to say other than suggesting matter will ultimately be decided by the courts.

St.-John Perse (Alexis Leger) talks in fluent, low-voiced French with Cummings. Even when speaking English shy Leger somehow manages to make one feel that he's speaking French, too . . . Leger—said by some to be France's greatest living poet, cf. "Exile," "Anabasis" — has wonderfully twinkly brown eyes. Looks as if children would love him . . . Cummings has brownish complexion that looks as if it should have had brown eyes to go with it, instead of gray . . . Robert Richmond, director of Institute of Contemporary Arts, talking earnestly to Cummings. From fragments of talk drifting across table must be some technical problem. (To do with derivation of some symbol?) . . . Mrs. Richmond says Anais Nin wonderful with children.

Robert Penn Warren, someone said, working on new book-length poem. About two nephews of Jefferson, who after killing someone entered into a suicide pact, to shoot each other. One missed, and fled . . . Cairns consulted I-Ching, ancient Chinese divination work, to see what would happen to him in next war. I-Ching said he'd be "returned to nature in a hundred parts." Cairns interprets as meaning he'll be vaporized.

Richmond looks worried about getting Cummings to Pierce Hall on time for his poetry reading.

Two Critical Appraisals of a Critical Volume on the FBI and Its Boss

"The Federal Bureau of Investigation," by Max Lowenthal, was published last week by William Sloane Associates (559 pp., $4.50). The Washington Post presents two reviews of this controversial book. One is by the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., vice president of Georgetown University, regent of Georgetown's School of Foreign Service and an authority on Soviet Russia. The other is by Joseph L. Rauh, jr., former MacArthur staff officer, former Deputy Housing Administrator and now a Washington lawyer. He has been counsel in many important civil liberties cases.

J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation

'A Lawyer's Indictment In Mood of Prosecutor'

By Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J.

THIS THICK VOLUME—of which 90 pages are devoted to citation of sources and index—reviews the record of the FBI since it was first organized in 1908 by Attorney General Charles J. Bonaparte. Readers who take up Mr. Lowenthal's book, as the present reviewer did, in the pleasurable anticipation of perusing a balanced and objective historical study of the Federal Bureau of Investigation will be rudely disappointed. What the author has produced is a lawyer's indictment of the FBI in the style and mood of a prosecuting attorney.

Mr. Lowenthal specializes on those chapters of the bureau's record which he describes as "little known, having been forgotten or sparingly publicized." Since he is drawing an indictment, not writing a biography, he selects his material with an eye to getting a conviction. He clearly conceives the FBI as a distinct menace to the security and liberties of the people of the United States. It will take some tall persuading to get such a verdict from the American people at the present, most dangerous crisis in our national existence.

PROCEEDING chronologically in his account, Mr. Lowenthal declares the bureau to have been an illegitimate child from the very moment of its conception: it was quietly brought into existence by Attorney General Bonaparte, without any approval of Congress, in 1908. This bar sinister, he argues, has characterized its growth and made it a progressively unwarranted and illegal interloper in the field of crime detection and crime prevention.

But before the reader meets the specific arguments in support of these allegations, he will notice a choice of words and phrases designed to slant the mind toward unfriendliness: thus the agents of the FBI are commonly called detectives, with considerable quotation from hostile witnesses who maintain that no detective can have high moral ideals, since he must always lead a life of deception. Increased responsibilities laid on the bureau from time to time by Congress are described as "greatly augmenting the business of the FBI." When the bureau set itself to analyze communism in directives for its field agents, Mr. Lowenthal refers with sarcasm to "the detective-historians." By introducing comparisons between the FBI and the Czarist secret police of former times, the "hated black cabinet of St. Petersburg," he suggests guilt by analogy. Examples of such well-known propaganda techniques abound throughout the text.

In his citation of native-born Americans who had expressed oposition to FBI interference in matters of a political character, Mr. Lowenthal reproduces with approval the testimony of John Reed, an early enthusiast for freedom of speech in this country during World War I. But he omits entirely the relevant fact that John Reed's loyalty lay with Soviet Russia; he went to Moscow, espoused the cause of Lenin, and lies buried as a hero just outside the Kremlin wall. On a wintry afternoon in November, 1922, the present reviewer wandered through the Red Square out of a curiosity to see the last resting place of that brilliant but erratic Harvard graduate.

IN WORKING up to the main allegation of illegality in certain FBI activities, Mr. Lowenthal, at one point, devotes something like four pages to quotations from Mr. J. Edgar Hoover's analysis of communism as an international menace. These reports were compiled while Mr. Hoover was in a subordinate position in the bureau, over 30 years ago. His analysis and foresight, however, reveal how accurately he had penetrated even then to the tangled roots and hidden objectives of the Communist organization both in the United States and elsewhere. Communism, he knew, is like the mass of an iceberg: one-ninth above water, the rest out of sight.

Mr. Lowenthal's quotations are textually accurate; but the tone of his comment and the choice of words in weaving the excerpts together convey a subtle sense of ridicule and boredom similar to the sophisticated posing of the pseudo-liberals during the unlamented pink decade. Always he is the prosecuting attorney, now indignant and positive, now cajoling and insinuating.

He frequently beclouds the difference between unorthodox opinions and Communist advocacy of violence under pretense of free speech. But he is too late. Verdict has already been handed down—in Korea as well as by recent history in the captive lands behind the Iron Curtain and by the performances of Mr. Malik and Mr. Vishinsky in the United Nations.

What Mr. Hoover contended for in those early years has now become the law of the land. On May 8, 1950, the Supreme Court, in the case of American Communications Association vs. Douds, upheld the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act in requiring an oath of nonmembership in the Communist Party from officers of a labor union as a prerequisite to profiting from the law. Mr. Justice Jackson delivered a notable opinion on the difference between the Communist Party and all other legitimate political groups in American history.

After analyzing the objectives of communism and the violent and undemocratic methods it adopts, the Justice declared that every member of the Communist Party is an agent to execute the Marxist program and hence to seize powers of Government in this country by force and violence; the entire conspiracy, he declared, is directed and controlled by a foreign government.

AT CERTAIN STAGES in his long brief, Mr. Lowenthal steps on somewhat firmer ground than the unsubstantial foothold provided by dislike for Mr. Hoover, against whom he has worked up an elaborate personal vendetta. The claims of overzealousness in search and seizure during the Palmer raids and deportations of 1919-1920 are resurrected. The legitimate complaints of some Senators and dissenting lawyers at that time are all compiled with a meticulousness and thoroughness not found in assembling the later record of constructive service and successful dealing with kidnaping, sabotage and espionage. The shadows are deep black and the highlights always faint.

The precipitate actions charged as illegal procedure against some agents of the bureau in selected cases over the 42 years of its activities have always met the corrective influence of the courts, the Congress and the press. Wire-tapping at present is under public scrutiny and the Attorney General has made a ruling on the limited occasions when it may be employed.

One of the best contributions of the Greek philosophers was their ability to see life steadily and see it whole. Mr. Lowenthal's fears of an American Gestapo or an MVD in the United States are manufactured fears. The analogy of a police state, which he labors to picture, ignores the essential and permanent difference between police power in a controlled democracy and in an uncontrolled dictatorship. The very publication of Mr. Lowenthal's book at this time is a shining example of one important difference.

The FBI, moreover, must come, hat in hand, to plead yearly for its budget before a congressional committee. Special investigations are available when required. An alert and vociferous opposition party in the Congress will not let opportunity pass for embarrassing the incumbent administration, should authentic and substantive abuses be discovered in the Department of Justice. The Supreme Court has more than once reversed a policy or action of a President without the intimation being raised that the Presidency be abolished.

Mr. Hoover's immediate superiors have been Cabinet officers responsible to the Chief Executive as well as to the Congress. Not one of them, Republican or Democrat, has raised the pother of trivia assembled in this book. After every flurry and investigation, Congress consistently voted the necessary funds and refused to hamstring the bureau.

MR. LOWENTHAL is greatly alarmed over secret files. The danger of FBI records being diverted to unlawful use is no greater per se than that attending any accumulation of confidential reports in the State Department, in local police files, in hospitals, in the archives of the armed forces, in the records of practicing physicians and lawyers. The mounting expenses and budget of the FBI are cited as indication of empire building and growing extravagance. No comparable figures are produced to show the over-all increase in all Government departments in recent years, a trend so marked and comprehensive as to bring about the Hoover (Herbert) Commission on the reorganization of the Federal Government. The recurrent drive to bring all employes of the FBI under Civil Service is renewed by Mr. Lowenthal despite the consistent refusal of the Congress to do so.

The director of the bureau, Mr. J. E. Hoover, is criticized for his speech-making and alleged publicity proclivities; but no mention is made of the frequent appearances of other high Government officials on lecture platforms, at political gatherings, at picnics and on Nation-wide electioneering tours. Exception is taken to the practice of former FBI agents accepting lucrative positions in private industry. No mention is made of the scores of former Government officials and Senators who have opened offices in Washington for the practice of law or for other purposes in which their experience and special knowledge of Government is of great benefit to their clients. Mr. Lowenthal himself, when recently questioned by the House Committee on Un-American Activities, was accompanied by a lawyer who had been a distinguished member of the Senate.

THE PUBLICATIONS of the bureau on crime prevention, juvenile delinquency and similar community problems are denounced. But no mention is made of the tons of Government literature published and distributed by other agencies on such subjects as soil conservation, gardening, rotation of crops, fertilizers, pest control, peanut crops and the ravages of termites.

The training programs of the bureau, including both agent training and the Police Academy for officers of the various State, municipal and county jurisdictions, are criticized either as inexpedient or an infringement of state jurisdiction . . . In sober judgment this latter activity, now called the FBI National Academy, has been a highly laudable demonstration of the voluntary cooperation now existing between the Federal agency and the numerous State and local police units. The lack of such a unified front against criminality and the ready refuge thus afforded to criminals was one of the defects in crime enforcement catalogued by the President's Research Committee on Social Trends (1933).

High officials and men of lower rank from local police jurisdictions throughout the Nation have assembled regularly since 1935 in the halls of the FBI for advanced courses in professional police work. During the past 15 years 2252 of them, including sheriffs and parole officers, came to Washington at their own expense, paid for their own board and lodging for three months and returned to their respective communities fortified in morale and improved in technique. Among the trainees were representatives of Scotland Yard, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and other foreign governments, such as Egypt, China and the Netherlands. The present reviewer has personally interviewed dozens upon dozens of these graduates of the FBI National Academy and found no evidence of the sinister doubts and suspicions apparently lurking in Mr. Lowenthal's mind.

IT MAY BE ASKED: Has this anthology of anti-Hooverisms no merit whatsoever? Its sole contribution would seem to consist in having swept up and put between bookcovers about all that has ever been said or imagined in defamation of the FBI. Consciously or unconsciously, Mr. Lowenthal has compiled a quick reference manual for all hostile elements, foreign and domestic, who seek ammunition for destroying confidence in one of our most trusted security agencies.

It Is 'the Civil Libertarian's Brief Against the National Police Force'

By Joseph L. Rauh, Jr.

THE MOST IMPORTANT THING about Max Lowenthal's book is that it was written at all. At this time when criticism of the FBI is treated in many quarters as tantamount to subversion, Mr. Lowenthal has written a brilliant exposition on the faults of our national police force. Already the author has suffered the visitations of the House Un-American Activities Committee for his pains. He and his publisher, too, deserve great credit for their courage.

This is not to say that the book "presents an objective picture of the FBI" as the publisher's blurb might lead the unsuspecting reader to believe. Far from it. Rather the book is the civil libertarian's brief against the national police force; it is a catalogue of FBI offenses. The book is about as objective as a good brief in a lawsuit or, for that matter, as the laudatory works written about the FBI from time to time.

Like the excellent brief that it is, the book is documented almost to the point of tedium. The speakers in the book are less Mr. Lowenthal than the newspapers, periodicals, Congressmen, lawyers, former FBI agents and Mr. Hoover himself. There are 465 pages of text and 90 pages of references. The book is written in dispassionate terms; where the words "Gestapo" and "Ogpu" are used, they come not from the author but from the leading newspapers and men of the times.

THE FIRST two-thirds of the book is a carefully presented history of the bureau prior to 1924. Mr. Lowenthal starts at the very beginning of the organization in 1908 and relates how President Theodore Roosevelt's Attorney General created the bureau after Congress had voiced its fears of a national police organization and refused to authorize its creation.

The Mann Act gave the organization its first fillip, but it was World War I that gave the bureau its first real opportunity. The author traces the slacker raids, the bomb plots and the anti-radical campaigns with great skill. But his account of the Palmer Red Raids in 1920 is far and away his best performance as a reporter.

Documented to the last inch, Mr. Lowenthal recounts the story of how 10,000 aliens were arrested mostly without warrants; how they were held for deportation under intolerable conditions without legal counsel or bail; how many were frightened into false confessions; how the few who were finally held deportable were whisked away practically without notice to their families.

It was these actions that led Federal Judge Anderson, after citing the detailed testimony in a Boston trial concerning these mass arrests, to conclude:

"I refrain from any extended comment on the lawlessness of these proceedings by our supposedly law-enforcing officials. . . . It may, however, fitly be observed that a mob is a mob, whether made up of Government officials acting under instructions from the Department of Justice, or of criminals, loafers and the vicious classes."

ALL THAT was 30 years ago. One cannot avoid the impression, in reading Mr. Lowenthal's detailed and exciting story of the Palmer Red Raids, that he sought primarily to show once and for all that Mr. Hoover was an active participant in the raids. The author's documentation on this point is conclusive:

At the time of the raids, Mr. Hoover was head of the General Intelligence Division of the bureau, which in turn was in charge of the bureau's antitradical activities; the instructions from the bureau to the field for the handling of the raids directed that every bureau agent keep in constant contact with Mr. Hoover ("On the evening of the arrests this office will be open the entire night. . . . Communicate by long-distance to Mr. Hoover any matters of vital importance or interest which may arise during the course of the arrests"); when the Senate Judiciary Committee investigated the Palmer Raids, Mr. Hoover testified in detail concerning them and at one point Attorney General Palmer stated that "Mr. Hoover, who was in charge of this in the Bureau of Investigation, is more familiar with the history of it than I am."

Since Mr. Lowenthal deemed the Palmer Red Raids and Mr. Hoover's part in them of sufficient importance to warrant devoting a substantial part of his book to them, one might have expected the author at least to have stated the official FBI answer on this point. The bureau has long taken the position that Mr. Hoover could not have been a participant in the raids because Attorney General Stone, who had spoken out against the raids, would not have promoted Mr. Hoover to director of the bureau in 1924 unless he had assured himself that Mr. Hoover had not been an active participant.

Possibly Mr. Lowenthal believed that this contention was adequately refuted by his account of Attorney General Stone's actions in respect to the bureau when he became Attorney General. Mr. Lowenthal recounts how the new Attorney General immediately and drastically restricted the work of the bureau and limited its functions to enforcing violations of the criminal law. It was thus into a narrowly restricted position that Attorney General Stone actually appointed Mr. Hoover, and his action can hardly be considered a refutation of the record.

THE LAST THIRD of the book is devoted to the actions of the FBI since the outset of World War II in September, 1939. The author deals at length with FBI infractions of civil liberties during the early years of the war. He quotes the report of the Senate Commerce Committee, which in 1940 went into the charges that had been made against the FBI. Possibly the most significant thing about the committee's report was the fact that the committee included among its members two Senators by the name of Harry S. Truman and Alben W. Barkley.

This may help explain the author's implication that it was President Truman's lack of confidence in Mr. Hoover that led the President to pass over Mr. Hoover when it came to the choice of a head for the Central Intelligence Agency. The author should know whereof he speaks insofar as the President is concerned; as late as this past week, Presidential Secretary Charles G. Ross described Mr. Lowenthal as a longtime friend of President Truman.

The author's account of the wire-tapping activities of the FBI is an exciting story told by a man who has followed the subject constantly for 25 years. But here, possibly more than anywhere else, Mr. Lowenthal failed to tell the whole story. After pointing out that the FBI had resorted to wire-tapping in apparent violation of law and that Attorney General Jackson had overruled Mr. Hoover on this question in March, 1940, the author omitted a very important fact.

In May, 1940, President Roosevelt told the Attorney General to authorize wire-tapping in certain cases and both Attorneys General Jackson and Biddle subsequently did exactly that. This is not to imply, of course, that either of these distinguished Attorneys General would have condoned the actions of the FBI agents in the Coplon trial in tapping the wires of a defendant talking to her lawyer and then trying to hide the facts in the courtroom.

ONE OF THE MOST interesting chapters in the entire book is the story of Mr. Hoover's successful efforts in 1940 and 1941 to keep his organization free from Civil Service. Mr. Hoover stated his belief that, under Civil Service, his bureau would be "bogged down with misfits and incompetents or . . . persons possessing communistic beliefs . . ." The Civil Service Commission responded that "Mr. Hoover believes in a merit system which is operated by one individual."

Mr. Hoover made the argument that law enforcement agencies could not function under Civil Service. The proponents of Civil Service sought to refute this contention with the experience and outstanding performance of Mr. Elmer L. Irey, who headed up the law enforcement activities of the Treasury Department.

How bitter the struggle became is evidenced by the statement of Georgia's Congressman Ramspeck, a great believer in Civil Service, on the floor of the House of Representatives:

"Mr. Hoover appeared before the subcommittee which has just left this floor this afternoon and off the record, according to the statement made to me by the chairman of the subcommittee himself, charged the Civil Service Commission with sending white applicants to colored doctors for physical examination. There is not a word of truth in it because the Commission has no doctors.

"I think Mr. Hoover made that statement off the record to prejudice that committee, which was

He's Been Reading Them for 16 Years

Smutty Books Bore the Censor

By Clarke Beach

TAKE THE FEDERAL censor's word for it: Most of those obscene foreign books and pictures he won't let you see are just a bore.

Huntington Cairns has been reading wicked literature and looking at dirty pictures for 16 years as special adviser on such matters for the Treasury Department's Customs Bureau.

"What effect have they had on your morals?" I asked him.

"According to the theory of censorship, I should be thoroughly corrupted by now," he replied with a broad, innocent grin. "But I don't believe I am. I just find them boring."

Cairns is, in fact, one of the most reputable citizens in Washington. He is secretary, treasurer and general counsel of the National Gallery of Art. A profound legal thinker, he has written three massive volumes on jurisprudence and now is writing a fourth.

He is an astonishingly wide scholar. Besides many popular articles, he has written learned treatises on art, philosophy, mathematics, taxation and other subjects. Harvard once asked him to join its faculty and teach whatever he wished at whatever price he set. But for the present he is happy here.

HE AND HIS tall, handsome (and intellectual) wife live among 12,000 books. He spends most of his evenings and all of his week-ends reading and writing. Mrs. Cairns acts as his critic.

Cairns is tall, plump, 46. A twinkling smile plays over his round face. He sits behind an enormous mahogany desk in a huge room at the end of long marble halls in the art gallery. He says the grandeur of the place makes him think sometimes that he ought to wear a toga.

As the protector of America's morals against lewd foreign influences, he has been a phenomenal success—at least in one respect.

Thanks chiefly to him, the Treasury has been in no controversies over its censorship of obscene imports since 1934. The Post Office Department, which exercises censorship in the field of domestic obscenity, is continually in hot water.

The champions of morality and the partisans of art are always ready to pounce on a censor from opposite directions, but Cairns' tightrope walking has evaded them all. Not one of his recommendations has been overruled by the courts—even contested, as far as he knows.

LIFE WAS NOT always so comfortable for the Treasury Department.

Custom inspectors used to take all the responsibility for deciding what could legally be imported. Repeatedly they demonstrated that they didn't know a Vatican mural from a Parisian "feelthy picture."

Customs Bureau decisions were continually being reversed by the courts, to the vast embarrassment of the Treasury.

Finally, in 1934, the bureau got the tongue-lashing of its life from a Federal court which reversed its ruling that James Joyce's novel "Ulysses" was obscene and illegal.

Treasury Secretary Henry Morgenthau, jr., decided that the Treasury had better hire an expert adviser who knew dirt from art. The job went to Cairns, then a Baltimore lawyer.

The Treasury knew Cairns well, for it had taken one of its notable legal beatings from him. He had successfully opposed the department when it prohibited the importation of George Moore's "Daphnis and Chloe."

Remaining in Baltimore, Cairns worked as part-time adviser until 1937. Then he came to Washington to join the Treasury staff as senior assistant general counsel.

In 1942 he took his present position with the National Gallery, continuing his censorship work without pay. It takes him only several hours a week. He can read a full-length novel in an hour and a half.

ACTUALLY, he doesn't have to spend much time reading the obscene literature. The bulk of it is merely the same old junk, he says. Often he can tell at a glance whether it is inadmissible.

Some people still are trying to bring into this country the oldest known pornographic novel in English, Dr. John Cleland's "Memoirs of Fanny Hill," written in 1750 and reprinted as late as this year.

Cairns can quickly spot trash by noting the publishers. Many specialize in such material, most of them now in Havana, Paris and Brussels.

France was the chief source of salacious imports until 1939. Then Japan, notably the Tokyo Sex Store, took the lead until 1941. After that it was Latin America and India. Now it is France again.

Some genuine art, both in the field of literature and painting, is banned by Cairns. If it is obscene according to 1950 American moral judgment, it is prohibited by law, art or not. Since views on obscenity vary among countries and change with the times, Cairns has had to work out his own definition of obscenity. He says it is simply "the class of sexual stimulants not customarily brought into public view."

ART PRESENTS Cairns with his most difficult problems. Pictures of pornographic sculpture from the temple walls of India or examples of the ancient pottery of Peru, for instance, might be of great value to the historian or scientist. Illustrations for some medical books might appear obscene to the layman. Cairns usually gets expert advice from the medical profession on these items.

Cairns has repeatedly had to prohibit the importation of some of the books of a close personal friend, Henry Miller, an American writer living in France, for whose literary talents Cairns has great respect.

Cairns recommended against Miller's "Tropic of Cancer" and "Tropic of Capricorn." On his desk was the latest Miller book to go on the condemned list, "The Rosy Crucifixion," a work in three parts of which the titles are "Sexus," "Nexus" and "Plexus."

Miller is philosophical about it. In fact, he once called Cairns "one of the most broad-minded and clear-sighted of all the censors."

Session Will Even Be Physically Drab

measure, and it probably will be shunted aside.

EVEN THE OPENING of the new session will be on the drab side. The newly renovated House and Senate chambers, a decorator's cross between night club and marble palace, aren't quite ready for legislative guests.

Senators will assemble again in the cramped old Supreme Court chamber off the main second-floor corridor. House members will drive the taxmakers out of the more commodious Ways and Means Committee room to resume sessions there until January.

Even the formality of a Presidential message, laying out Mr. Truman's hopes for the session, may be dispensed with. The President told reporters last week he will keep Congress informed mainly through letters to committee chairmen.

There will be something of sadness, too, about this eleventh hour session. Many a well-known legislator, tripped up in the November election, must take his old seat as if nothing had happened.

The Senate's top Democratic leaders, Senators Scott W. Lucas (Ill.) and Francis J. Myers (Pa.), will fall in this back-on-borrowed-time class.

As "lame ducks" themselves, their leadership job, never a sinecure, will be doubly difficult. It explains in large part what's happened to the Democratic drive. It won't be easy for men rejected by the voters in November to tell Congress how it ought to legislate.

IN CONTRAST, the Senate Republican leadership, given a new lease by the reelection of Senator Robert A. Taft, will be riding the crest even before Republicans climb within two votes of Senate control next January.

Already the transcript of Senator Taft's first major press conference since his reelection has become a sort of Republican Party bible.

Taft's positions on taxes, "almost impossible" to pass in the short session; on rent control, "I doubt this lame duck session will extend it," and on foreign aid measures, "re-examination," was promptly reflected in Republican Party thinking.

Taft tersely summed up what he thought the short session of Congress should do in one word: "Adjourn!" You will hear that word echoed again and again by Republicans in the forthcoming Congress.

Certainly much of the limited time will be spent in preliminary jockeying for organizing the next regular session.

GOP leaders already have invited newly elected Republican Senators in to "get acquainted" with their colleagues-to-be and to make known their wishes on committee assignments.

MANY A MAJOR organization issue, affecting vital decisions to be made in the Eighty-second Congress, will be fought out backstage in the short session. Among them: Whether Senator Wayne Morse (R., Oreg.), Senator William F. Knowland (R., Calif.) or a compromise candidate will get the new Republican seat on the Republican Policy Committee.

Senate Democrats have a ticklish organization problem of their own to solve, well ahead of their Eighty-second Congress caucus: How to choose a leader who can best bridge the party's big North-South gap.

Could the President pick a leader to replace Scott Lucas, his choice would undoubtedly be his good friend, Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.). The South seems likely to line up instead behind a Western moderate less prominently identified with the Fair Deal, Senator Ernest W. McFarland (D., Ariz.).

Even the House, whose leadership was untouched by the November upsets, faces organization trials.

Speaker Sam Rayburn's "21-day rule," enabling committee chairmen to bypass the once all-powerful Rules Committee, is already the target of a tacit Republican-Southern Democratic coalition.

The coalition may not try to strike down the reform rule until January, but the T-formation attack is now forming.

Mr. Truman last week told a press conference he expects to get everything he asks for from this changing session. He said he expects to get it all.

Wisecracking Republicans, never so cocky in recent years, like to put it this way: He asked for it! They say Mr. Truman may not get exactly what he asked for, but he could and probably will get the works.

FBI Study Is Hardly 'Objective'

composed primarily of men from the South.

"It was a dastardly thing for him to do, and he ought not to have done it."

The result of the bitter charges and counter-charges was a compromise: a recommendation that the FBI should some day be placed under Civil Service, but not at that time. Unfortunately, the author leaves the subject hanging there.

MR. LOWENTHAL'S last chapter is one very close to his heart. As one who has devoted his life to civil liberties, he shows his deep concern at the growth of FBI dossiers on men and women in all walks of life. The author also takes up the role of the FBI in obstructing confrontation of witnesses in loyalty cases—an issue now before the Supreme Court.

The author is, of course, less well qualified when he leaves the field of civil liberties and enters the field of crime detection. Even here, by dogged documentation, he carefully briefs the case against the FBI in an effort to deflate its claims of perfection: ". . . the New York City police built up the case against Hauptmann . . .;" Dillinger was run down because of the work of "a local Indiana police sergeant . . .;" Karpis "was traced following the capture of a number of his gang by Postoffice inspectors;" Brunette was located by New York City police "only to have Hoover dash to New York" and stage "melodramatic raids;" the eight German saboteurs were "detected" by the Coast Guard only to have "Mr. Hoover ask the admiral at the head of the Coast Guard to reprimand his subordinates for intruding upon the FBI's jurisdiction;" Whittaker Chambers' pumpkin material "was revealed in the slander suit" of Alger Hiss; Fuchs and Gold were uncovered "due to the work of the Canadian police." It would be fascinating reading if Mr. Lowenthal's book were serialized side by side with Mr. Hoover's answer.

BACK IN 1948, a prominent American had this to say of the FBI:

"There is a disposition in both branches of Congress to idealize the FBI. Those who are in the FBI are people just like we are. Their blood runs through their hearts and goes through their bodies. They eat. They wear clothes. They are simply human beings. There is nothing sacronsanct about the FBI."

The man who said this is no wild-eyed radical. He probably wouldn't even mind being called a conservative. His name is Senator Tom Connally of Texas. The trouble is that Senator Connally wasn't wholly right. The FBI has been treated as sacronsanct, as being beyond the pale of criticism. Mr. Lowenthal's great contribution is his effort to make Connally's dictum come true.

The question naturally arises whether Mr. Lowenthal would have made a greater contribution if he had written the objective study his publisher claims for him instead of preparing the brief that he actually wrote. Mr. Lowenthal clearly believes that it is time that we take a look at one side of the record of our national police force.

The cause of freedom has seldom been sustained or advanced by objective studies presenting a carefully balanced picture of all sides of the question. It has been advanced by the great writings of such men as William Lloyd Garrison and Thomas Jefferson, who battled eloquently for freedom without thought of personal risk. Mr. Lowenthal has not written with the fire and eloquence of such men. But his powerful documentation is his substitute for the greater literary inspiration offered by his predecessors.

ALL THINKING people ackowledge that there are pro-Russian spies and saboteurs in our midst. But we must not, in our efforts to ferret out spies and saboteurs, discard the liberties which Americans have unhestitatingly defended with their lives.

Solutions to these problems can come only through intelligent public discussion of the issues. The reactionaries of the right and the Communists on the left seek and serve only to obscure them. It is up to the great bulk of the people in the vital center to see that these issues are thoroughly discussed and carefully evaluated. What we need now is an objective evaluation of how to obtain maximum security with a minimum intrusion on personal liberties. Mr. Lowenthal has presented a magnificent brief on one side of this problem.

'World Affairs' Background

Events Have Magnified The President's Power

This is the seventh background article in the 26-week "Information on World Affairs" program being carried out by The Washington Post and many junior and senior high schools in the area. Questions based on these articles and on current events are published each Thursday and presented in classrooms the same day. Answers are printed the following Saturday. The program is under the direction of J. Edward Gerald and Edgar B. Wesley of the University of Minnesota.

A COMBINATION of circumstances has placed in the hands of President Truman a greater potential power for world leadership than any other American President has ever enjoyed or had thrust upon him.

The decision of the United Nations that aggression must be stopped by force made it possible for the President to send American military forces into Korea to fight what actually is a war, without the benefit of a formal declaration of war.

Although the power to declare war is reserved to Congress, other American Presidents have used the position as commander-in-chief of the Nation's military forces to use military power or the threat of force as an implement of foreign policy. None has done so, however, on so vast scale as is the case in Korea.

The rise, after World War II, of the United States as the dominant western power to which all other free nations look as a leader, also has served to make the American presidency a more commanding position than it has ever been before.

During the war President Roosevelt loomed as a great world leader, but he shared the position with the heads of other powerful western nations. Today those other nations, their strength sapped by war and its aftermath, look to the United States for aid and leadership.

Today President Truman and Generalissimo Josef Stalin, of Russia, stand alone as the two most powerful men in the world.

THE PRESIDENT of the United States, under the provisions of the Constitution, makes our foreign policy. His actions naturally are shaped by many factors—the attitude of the general public, pressure exerted by special interest groups, the stand taken by Congress and the various interested departments of the Government and the developments of foreign policy in other nations.

Basically, however, by virtue of four specific powers, the President has the final word on foreign policy.

He has the power to make treaties.

He appoints ambassadors and ministers to other governments.

He is commander-in-chief of the Nation's military forces.

He recognizes foreign governments.

Contrary to widespread opinion, the Senate does not ratify treaties with foreign nations, it only provides advice on treaty making and consents to their ratification by the President.

If the Senate fails to consent, the President cannot ratify a treaty, but this has occurred only a relatively few times in our history.

The one outstanding instance of the Senate balking a President's treaty-making powers is the case of the League of Nations. Our failure to participate in this world organization, which President Wilson had helped plan, hurt our prestige badly.

THE MATTER of prestige probably is the most powerful force operating to compel the Senate to go along with the President on an agreement which many Senators may not look upon favorably. The President, in making an agreement, has placed this Nation on record as favoring a certain course of action. To contradict him in a stated policy creates an unfavorable impression abroad.

But while the Senate may hesitate to publicly contradict the President on a matter of foreign policy, the President likewise usually takes precaution that he does not present an agreement which forces the Senate into taking a stand against him. The majority leader of his party usually feels out the Senate attitude well in advance of any controversial foreign agreement.

But all agreements made by the Executive need not be given senatorial approval. The President is empowered by the Constitution to make executive agreements, which may be secret, with other nations.

President Roosevelt's famous "swap" of over-age destroyers for American bases on British islands early in World War II is an example of the power a President holds through executive agreements.

The matter of appointing ambassadors and ministers to other countries follow much the same pattern as the making of treaties.

President Roosevelt, in referring to a certain ambassador, once said "my ambassador." The remark aroused a flurry of protest. The ambassador, said the critics, is not Roosevelt's ambassador, but the United States ambassador.

The critics were wrong.

The men who represent the United States in other countries are servants of the President. They are answerable to him, not to Congress or the people.

The President appoints them, he can recall them. He can appoint them, after recall, to another post, or fail to appoint them to another post. In other words, he can fire them.

The Senate, as in the case of treaties, shares in appointive powers to the extent that it can either approve or disaprove the apointment. An appointment is almost never disapproved—the attitude being that it is largely the President's business who he wants to represent him.

AS IN THE CASE of President Truman sending United States military forces into Korea, the power of the commander-in-chief is a powerful one. It has been used through the years.

The first John Adams used the Navy to wage what amounted to undeclared war against France. Monroe sent troops to seize Florida from the Spanish. Fillmore sent ships to Japan to force the Japanese to open their doors to the outside world.

Theodore Roosevelt used two of his policy-making powers to pave the way for the Panama Canal. As commander-in-chief, he secretly aided Panamanian rebels to set up a government independent of Colombia. Then, using his power to recognize a foreign power, he recognized Panama. The Panama government, quite naturally, negotiated with the United States on the rights to the Canal Zone.

The power of recognition was used by Franklin Roosevelt in 1933 when he extended recognition to Soviet Russia.

With all these powers at his command, the President is able to lay down broad doctrines of foreign policy.

Washington enunciated the first of these in his policy of no foreign entanglements. The policy was one that could not stand. It was abandoned years ago.

The Monroe Doctrine closed the Western Hemisphere to foreign meddling. The Truman Doctrine pledged aid to Greece and Turkey as a means of containing Communist expansion.

THIS DOCTRINE has been expanded to the understood, if not formally enunciated, proposition that the United States will stand, by arms if need by, against Communist aggression anywhere in the world.

Under this doctrine United States troops fought in Korea as a police force carrying out the mandate of the United Nations.

Declaration of war is reserved to Congress and yet, through the evolution of American foreign policy and the accident of United Nations action, war can be fought without a declaration of war and with the tacit consent of the Congress.

While only Congress can declare war, the situation has always existed whereby a President, if he wished, could steer the Nation to the brink of war through his actions.

In shaping and carrying out his foreign policy decisions, the President works with the Secretary of State, a member of his Cabinet and entirely his servant. While the Secretary of State may in fact be developing and carrying out foreign policy himself, he nevertheless is doing so at the direction of the President and is answerable to the President.

Berry Nice for Decorations

Oh, Hail, the Berried Shrub

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

BERRIED SHRUBS continue to beautify the garden long after the brilliance of bloom has disappeared. Red, yellow, gold, blue and purple, they make excellent garden decorations as well as striking arrangements for the house. Many of them attract birds and thus play a useful part in keeping gardens free from insects.

That flower arrangers have become aware of the value of berried shrubs for household decorations was demonstrated at the fall shows, where many of the best exhibits included some variety of berried branches in combination with fall flowers.

The pyracanthus has proven to be the most spectacular and useful of all the berried plants in this vicinity and is widely used as it adapts itself to town and country as a specimen plant trained to grace a doorway, or left to tumble in careless fashion over wall or bank. Trimmed, it makes a stunning hedge, but in the enthusiasm for this useful and lovely plant others should not be overlooked.

A SEARCH through the nurseries at this time will reveal many unknown and lovely plants which will, perhaps, fill the need in one's own particular garden.

Many of the berry-bearing shrubs play a double role in the garden and their blossoms are an important part in the spring picture. Among them are the viburnams. Like many other garden plants, they come from the Orient, and most of them are rugged and adapt themselves to almost all garden conditions.

One of the most desirable of the heavily berried varieties is the V. dilatatum, which has clusters of small, brilliant, persistent red berries. The foliage is very handsome. Specimens of this were shown at the shrub display at the Potomac Rose Show and at the Bureau of Plant exhibit at the Alexandria Show.

Another viburnam which is especially adapted to city gardens is the V. setigerum, which has small, orange, pea-sized berries which grow in drooping clusters. This is a small shrub and is considered one of the most valuable of recent importations from China.

Picking cranberries in Burlington County, New Jersey.

THE AMERICAN cranberry, V. trilobum, is another good shrub and very hardy. In spring it has flat clusters of white blossoms. The berries begin to color in midsummer; their pale tones of rosy pink finally turn to brilliant red. The berries do not last into cold weather but disappear after the first freeze, but they are lovely through the early fall, and in their different stages of coloring are excellent accompaniments to fall flowers. The bush does well in half shade.

The Black Haw, V. prunifolium, is large and coarse and should be used in woodland or fence row. In spring, the foliage opens pinkish or red and in fall becomes brilliant scarlet. The fruit turns from pink to red and finally black.

Searching for shrubs in the nearby nurseries is one of the pleasantest of fall pastimes. It is often difficult to make selections from catalogues, as descriptions vary and in each nursery one finds a different collection. Seeing them growing, it is an easy matter to transplant them in the mind's eye to the home garden and in unthought of combinations. Recently we saw a planting of the bright purple Callicarpa, the "Beauty Berry". This prolific bearer of berries was massed at the nursery near a patch of deep bronze barberry, while close by yellow and bronze chrysanthemums glowed in the autumn sun. It was not difficult to imagine some of these used together in a garden plot.

BARBERRY is one of the most useful and lovely of all the shrubs, but its many varieties are too little known. It is seldom used with imagination—usually as a hedge plant to keep out the neighbor's children or dogs. We remember a garden in Petersburg, Va., where the owner had a collection of barberries and the many forms and colors were amazing to even the more advanced horticulturists who visited the garden on tour.

The Euonymus is another family which has many forms well worth considering. One of the most interesting is the old favorite E. Americana, the "Strawberry bush," with its pink and white berries and red seeds. The bush honeysuckles are lovely and inexpensive. The Lonicera maacki is one of the hardiest and strongest growing. It has yellow blooms and red fruit which last well. For indoor forcing, the L. fragantissima is useful. This variety blooms outdoors in March. It is rather straggly and should be planted with other shrubs of more compact form.

Time to Cover

Get Those Roses Hilled Up and Topped

THE UNUSUALLY mild and late fall, prevalent in so many parts of the country this year, has raised many a question about what to do with roses.

In all but the very warmest parts of the country the fall hilling should now be well under way. With the clean-up frosts of the past few weeks, the plants are rapidly going to dormancy and the tops can now be cut to a convenient size so the work of covering can be done more advantageously.

Early covering in these unsettled fall days is desirable, for any part of the plant which is underground is not liable to be injured by sudden drops to severe freezing temperatures, while the rest of the plant may still be in soft growth.

Here are some of the techniques developed by Jackson & Perkins Co. in New York which are applicable to all but the frost free areas.

FLORIBUNDAS and hybrid teas are first cut to an even height, "knee-high" or about 18 to 20 inches is a convenient height to use. Soil is brought in from another part of the garden to hill against the plants. If put on about 8 inches it usually settles to 6 inches by winter. This insures safe refrigeration for the covered part of the plant against all but the most severe temperatures. When the cold weather sets in and the ground is frozen, cover the tops with straw, hay or leaves to hold the frost in the ground for the duration.

TREE ROSES must be covered in all but the mildest climates. Best method is to remove soil from one side of the plant and loosen it on the other, then carefully bend the plant over to the ground. Fasten it securely with a stake and twine, and then cover the entire plant, top and all with 6 inches of soil. Leaves or straw may be added after the ground freezes in cold climates.

CLIMBERS are such an important part of the garden these days that they should be protected in the colder sections of the country against winter injury. In this area removal from supports and flopping to the ground is usually sufficient for safety although leaves and straw are added advantageously for extra protection. In warmer climates where dangerous freezes come very infrequently, it is not worth while bringing the plants down.

If you want to go a bit further, a good application of your favorite all purpose spray on a sunny morning will get many egg masses of insects and many loose spores of diseases. Be sure this dries before it freezes when applied. As an alternative this can also be applied in very early spring.

If put to bed snugly and not uncovered too early, the present day roses thrive in just about all parts of this country and it pays well to give that careful attention now—for next year's bloom will be more plentiful and pleasing and the joy of owning roses will be a bigger thrill.

Lauricella's Aerial Drops Wildcats Off Unbeaten List

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 26.—For 45,000 bone-chilled fans it was 10-above today, but Kentucky's hopes of an unbeaten season plummeted to zero at the end of a 60-minute manhandling by the football playing savages of Tennessee.

By a score of 7 to 0, the Volunteers crashed Kentucky from its unbeaten pedestal. A stern reminder that Kentucky teams don't beat Bob Neyland's Tennessee elevens, ever.

Three hours after the game, Kentucky's selection to play in the Sugar Bowl January 1 was announced in New Orleans.

This latest Neyland triumph, the nineteenth straight for Coach Bob over Kentucky, was of a kind with most of the others, achieved mainly by clamping a tight defensive encirclement on the Wildcats who in 19 seasons have scored only three touchdowns against Tennessee.

Today Tennessee devitialized the passing threat of Kentucky's Vito Parilli and produced a game-winning aerialist of its own in Hank Lauricella, who clicked with a beauteous second-quarter pitch that was decisive.

A check would show that more ground was covered by the famed Kentucky beverage that passed from hand to hand in the frigid stands than the Wildcats achieved running against the ferocious Tennessee line—a mere 36 yards net all afternoon.

When Tennessee struck for the winning touchdown, 4 minutes before the end of the half, it was a thing of beauty with Lauricella stealing the passing thunder of the Wildcats' famed Parilli.

On the fourth down, from the 27-yard line, Lauricella stood poised in his well-protected pocket until halfback Bert Rechichar could maneuver into the end zone, and then Rechichar made a brilliant catch of an equally brilliant throw over the heads of two defenders.

Pat Shires booted the seventh point through the posts on his second try after a Kentucky offside reprieved what had been an original wide kick.

Happy Breaks for Vols

It was a happy break of the game that set up the Vols touchdown, on a punt by Lauricella that bounded crazily and nicked the flattened figure of Kentucky end Ben Zaranka who had thrown a

Dartmouth Loses

Perfect Year For Princeton

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 25 (U.P.).—Princeton defeated Dartmouth, the rain and a 65-mile per hour gale, 13-7, today in a weird wind-up for its first undefeated season since 1935.

It was an eerie afternoon. The coaches vowed they would play without postponement come hell or high water, and both teams somehow managed to reach the stadium. Trees were felled by the wind outside the stadium and the flooded cinder track was a swirling river. Yet less than 5000 fans attended of the 31,000 who bought tickets in advance.

Princeton scored its two touchdowns in the second period after Dartmouth had scored its only touchdown in the first quarter. Other than that, the game was a weird concoction of crazily squirting fumbles, straight-up punts, and stumbling running.

Dick Kazmaier was the hero today. Just as he was throughout this perfect record Princeton season. He puddle-jumped 32 yards around end for the first touchdown. He also set up the second Princeton touchdown with a 22-yard run which allowed Jack Davison to buck over from three.

The first conversion try having failed, Kazmaier, a leading all-American candidate, took matters in his own hands and ran end for the extra point. The try for the point after the first Princeton score failed when Jake McCandless could not hold the slippery football on the pass from center.

'Shullie' Boots Extra Point After Davis' Pass

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

In weather that would have stopped the most heroic mailman, George Washington U. continued to hold its new-found mastery over Georgetown with a 7-6 triumph yesterday at Griffith Stadium.

A hardy (or foolhardy) crowd of 6171 shivered in sub-freezing temperature, peering through the gloom and snowflakes to watch the Colonials not only score their third victory in the 19-game series but their third consecutive one.

Adding to the colossal discomfort of the contentants was the fact that the field was a sea of puddles from earlier steady rain.

Both Score on Passes

Yet, despite the elements, each team scored on a spectacular pass play. Georgetown got its early in the game on a 63-yard touchdown play from Frank Mattingly to Bugs Thompson.

GW matched it early in the second period on a 15-yarder from Handy Andy Davis to End Charley Jones. Davis had set it up with a 17-yard pass to End Bill Szanyi.

The big point belonged to Johnny Shullenbarger, punting hero, too, who booted a perfect placement for the winning margin. It was his eighteenth successful conversion in 21 tries this year.

The final result was a sorry ending to the collegiate career of Dick Haesler, Georgetown's place-kicking specialist. Haesler had missed only one in 14 previous tries this year and had a record of making 23 of 24 conversions.

Haesler had a clear shot for his try, he just didn't meet the ball right and his kick veered to the left of the uprights.

With six minutes left in the game, and when the snow had reached near-blizzard proportions, Haesler attempted a field goal from the G.W. 33. He never had a chance to redeem himself, the kick was blocked by a whole side of the GW line when Captain Tommy Hardiman had difficulty holding the slippery ball.

Pregame estimates called for a tossup and, despite the abominable conditions, that's just the way it went. In fact, Bo Rowland, only G.W. coach ever to beat Georgetown, and he's making a habit of it, said before the game he thought the extra-point could be decisive.

GW started out by using a strat-

Kentucky's forward-passing patterns which helped the team to get the $100,000 invitation to the Sugar Bowl, were installed by Adolph Rupp, the school's basket ball coach, whose tactics convinced football coach Paul Bryant . . . because a football coach can't hang onto that ball after the snap from center. There are reports that Jules Sikes' contract won't be renewed at Kansas U. In the defeat by Missouri, Kansas backs fumbled nine straight times and lost the ball . . . Frank Howard, Clemson coach, is denying reports that he would shift from the single-wing to the Split-T formation next season. "Why should I change?" Howard asks. Michigan Wins Title; Bowl Bid

Wolves Slap Ohio State, 9-3, In Blizzard

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 25 (U.P.) A mighty Michigan line and some magnificent punting by Chuck Ortmann gave Michigan the Big Ten championship and the Rose Bowl bid today as the Wolverines ploughed under Ohio State 9 to 3 in a 10-degree blizzard before 50,503 fans.

Michigan came into Ohio Stadium with only an outside chance of winning both the title and the Rose Bowl invitation and came out of the foot-deep snow with both.

Wisconsin beat Minnesota and Illinois lost to Northwestern. Michigan by virtue of its win today finished its Western Conference schedule with four wins, a loss and a tie. Ohio State only needed to win or tie today, but couldn't make it as Ortmann kept the Buckeyes in their own back yard all afternoon with his coffin-corner punts.

The loss gave Ohio a second-place tie with Wisconsin, each with five wins and two losses. Illnois finished third with a 4-2 record.

The battle, forty-seventh renewal of the bitter grid rivalry, looked like it was being played in a section of the Arctic Circle instead of Ohio Stadium. Passing and running attacks were stalled like an auto in a snowdrift.

It was a battle of punts between Ortmann and Ohio's All-America candidate, Vic Janowicz, and a contest of charging lines.

Ortmann came out far superior to Janowicz. And Michigan's Tony Momsen who blocked a Janowicz punt that bounced into the end zone for Michigan's lone touchdown in the last 20 seconds of the second period was the hero of a brilliant forward wall.

Ohio went ahead 3-0 in the first four minutes of play when tackle Joe Campanella blocked an Ortmann punt and Bob Momsen, Tony's brother, pounced on it on the Michigan 30. Then Janowicz boomed a field goal 27 yards through the blinding snow.

Michigan got its first break late in the first period when Captain Al Wahl, a tackle, crashed through the Ohio line and blocked Janowicz' attempted punt from deep in the Ohio end zone. The ball

Kentucky Accepts Sugar Bowl Bid; Oklahoma Delays Action One Week

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 25 (AP).—Kentucky will play in the 1951 Sugar Bowl football game against an opponent to be announced later, probably Oklahoma.

Kentucky lost to Cotton Bowl bound Tennessee 7-0 today, their first loss in an 11-game season. It was Kentucky's final game of the year.

Oklahoma, their most likely Sugar Bowl opponents, swept past Nebraska today 49 to 35.

Oklahoma will not consider a bid on a post-season contest until after it finishes its season on December 2 against Oklahoma A. and M. at Stillwater, Coach Bud Wilkinson announced today.

Sooners 'Outpoint' Nebraska for No. 30

NORMAN, Okla., Nov. 25 (U.P.).—Oklahoma's souped-up Sooners gave up three touchdowns to brilliant Bobby Reynolds today, but rolled over Nebraska, 49 to 35, to win everything in sight—their 30th straight victory, the Big Seven title, and probably a Sugar Bowl bid.

The 54,000 fans, who set a Big Seven attendance record for the second week in a row, saw Reynolds keep his team in the ball game through a 21-21 first half. But it was a rapier duelling a machinegun nest.

Only a mediocre Oklahoma A. & M. College team stands between the Sooners and their second straight undefeated season.

Reynolds scored in the first half on runs of 20, 14 and 16 yards after Nebraska had spotted Oklahoma a 14-point lead. But the Sooners' Bill Vessels shared the running honors in a battle of sophomores.

4th Period Field Goal Defeats Mustangs

DALLAS, Tex., Nov. 25 (AP).—A 20-yard field goal by Henry Dickerson with only 3 minutes and 37 seconds left gave Baylor a 3-0 victory over Souther Methodist before 50,000 today and probably knocked the Methodists out of a bowl invitation.

It had been heralded as a scoring duel between two great passing teams but each bungled all sorts of chances for touchdowns and it remained for Dickerson to do the job the great Larry Isbell of the Bears and Kyle Rote of the Methodists couldn't put across.

With the defeat went SMU's hopes of getting a bid to either the Orange or Sugar Bowl games.

The Methodists had the consolation only of setting an intercollegiate record for pass completions. SMU ran its completions to 148 for the season and that was one more than Mississippi made in 1947 in hanging up the previous record.

Northwestern Knocks Illini Out of Bowl

By Jerry Liska

EVANSTON, Nov. 25 (AP).—Illinois, the Nation's sixth-ranked team, had its Rose Bowl hopes chilled to cold ashes by a rallying Northwestern team which stunned the Illini 14 to 7 on Dyche Stadium's frozen turf today.

The dramatic Big Ten finale before 50,000 shivering fans produced an upset by Northwestern which scored twice in the final half to erase a 7-0 lead which the Illini fashioned in the first two minutes and 27 seconds of the game.

The loss killed Illinois' Rose Bowl chances, leaving the Illini with a 4-2 league record.

The Rose Bowl assignment unofficially went to Michigan and

Stanford Ties California

By Hal Wood

BERKELEY, Calif., Nov. 25 (U.P.). Embattled Stanford, saved its greatest game to the last today, stubbornly holding the mighty California Bears to a 7 to 7 tie. Even in the stalemate, that was as bad as defeat, the Bears still clinched their third straight trip to the New Year's Day Rose Bowl game.

The underdog Indians, who were startling enough last week when they held Army's legions to a mere 7 to 0 margin, were even more magnificent today.

Playing as if their lives depended on it, they snapped California's regular season string of victories at 34, accomplishing something no other Pacific Conference opponent had been able to do in three seasons.

California still stayed in the undefeated ranks of the Nation's teams, but it was the first time in three years that the Bears had not won every game during their regular schedule.

Good On Defense

Today's tie was a moral victory for Stanford, despite the fact that the Bears won the Rose Bowl assignment.

A terrific defensive performance from such Stanford stalwarts as End Bill McColl, linebacker Russ Pomeroy and Guard Norm Manoogian kept the Bears in the hole most of the way.

It was a game that started out slowly. Building up to a crescendo until the last minute of play when California's Jim Monachina, on a double reverse, raced 35 yards to the Stanford 42. From

Wretched Football Weather

Even Goal Posts Go Down

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (AP).—The snow, sleet, winds and wretched weather in general that hit the eastern part of the United States today made quagmires out some football fields, refrigerators out of others and made at least four completely unplayable.

The Penn State-Pitt game at Pittsburgh and the Colgate-Rutgers affair at New Brunswick were the major victims of the elements. College officials took one look and sent the players home.

The Scranton-Niagara and Kings College-Gannon affairs also were called off.

The Scranton-Niagara game will be played at 1:30 p. m. (EST) tomorrow and it had better start on time, for the storm knocked out lines supplying power for the floodlighting system. Even the goalposts were blown down.

Crowds stayed away in droves from the games that were played.

The two big Ivy League games—Cornell-Penn at Philadelphia and Dartmouth-Princeton at Princeton, N. J.—drew a total of 23,000 spectators. About 96,000 were expected to pack the two stadiums.

So bad were conditions at Princeton that when Dartmouth Back Dick Brown tried a kick in the second period, the hurricane which was raging blew the ball backward. All television lines were down, too, as were Western Union wires. The Associated Press was forced to obtain its report of the game via the one telephone line that was open in the stadium.

Each Has Lost 8 Games

Redskins, Colts Play Here Today in Cellar Battle

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

The Washington Redskins and Baltimore Colts hook up in the Futility Bowl at Griffith Stadium today.

Both are eminently qualified for the uncoveted assignment, having lost the same number of games, eight out of nine.

The Redskins' record is a bit gaudier since the locals, by diligently doing the wrong things at the right times, have managed to lose their eight games consecutively.

The Colts, on the other hand, interrupted a six-game losing streak by upending the Green Bay Packers two weeks ago. They quickly returned to form in the following two games, however.

Matter of fact, Coach Clem Crowe's visitors placed the only mark on the Redskins' otherwise unsullied record—they lost to Washington way back in September, 38-14.

In addition to determining which will be the losingest team in the league, there's another incentive for the clubs. The loser will probably finish on the bottom of the NFL heap and thereby get first choice in the annual player draft next month.

The Redskins opened a 13-point favorite, but, like the temparature, have dropped from day to day. The prospects of another raw day—snow, wind and rain—whittled the Redskins to a mere 7½ point favorite. They've also whittled the crowd estimate from 23,000 to 20,000, practically all of whom are season ticket holders.

Next to Coach Crowe, Frankie Spaniel, Hal Crisler, Hardy Brown and Frankie Filchock will be the happiest on the Baltimore squad if the visitors triumph. Each played for the Redskins at one time, Spaniel only a month or so ago.

And Wayne Millner, the former Redskins' end, will be rooting against the Burgundy and Gold too. He's the Colts chief scout and has briefed the visitors on what to expect from Coach Herman Ball's squad.

Still a far way from being in tip-top shape, the locals are, however, in a better physical state than they were for last week's clash with the powerful Cleveland Browns.

Then too, Sammy Baugh's back in action,

Cotton Bowl Only Major One Filled

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (AP).—Following today's college football, only one major bowl game, the Cotton at Dallas, was definitely set—and that was decided before the afternoon's action.

All others—Rose, Sugar, Orange and Gator—are still up in the air.

The only thing certain for New Year's Day is Texas vs. Tennessee in the Cotton classic. Tennessee, 7 to 0 victor over Sugar bowl-bound Kentucky, had announced earlier it would meet the Longhorns.

Here's the approximate picture on the other major bowls:

Rose at Pasadena—California vs. Michigan, although both still need approval of their respective conferences faculty members.

Sugar at New Orleans—Kentucky vs. Oklahoma. The Wildcats had announced their acceptance after today's loss to Tennessee. Oklahoma has said it would make no decision until after next Saturday's game with Oklahoma A. & M.

Orange at Miami—Miami vs. Clemson, Wyoming, Alabama or Fordham. Unbeaten Miami, sporting an 8-0-1 record, is a natural host. Clemson whipped Auburn, 41-0; Fordham downed NYU, 13-0, and Alabama trampled Florida, 41-13, to boost their respective stock. Wyoming, the Skyline Six kingpin was idle, but Cowboys are anxious for a bid.

Gator at Jacksonville, Fla.—The bowl committee said the first announcement probably will come next Tuesday at the earliest. Several of the above teams are in the running.

Other bowl games definitely set include:

December 9:

Presidential Cup at University of Maryland—Texas A. and M. vs. Georgia.

January 1:

Salad Bowl, Phoenix—Arizona State at Tempe vs. unnamed opponent.

Sun Bowl, El Paso—West Texas State vs. Cincinnati.

Billy Cox's 34-Yd. Pass Wins It, 7-0

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., Nov. 25 (AP).—Billy Cox, the Nation's No. 3 forward passer, tossed a fourth down pass to Halfback Tom Powers for 34 yards and a touchdown today to give Duke a 7-0 southern conference football victory over arch-rival North Carolina.

The play, with three minutes gone in the third period, enabled Duke to register its first victory in five years over the Tar Heels and wind up with a 7-3 record, Duke's best in seven years.

STATISTICS

North Carolina		Duke
16	First downs	10
177	Rushing yardage	130

4	Punts	7
29.3	Punt average	33.7
2	Fumbles lost	2
16	Yards penalized	7

A shivering crowd of 40,000 watched in sub-freezing weather as Duke repeatedly staved off North Carolina threats.

Four times North Carolina was halted within the Duke 20. Twice the Tar Heels were unable to come up with a scoring punch when within the Duke 10.

Quick Kick Backfires

An attempted quick kick that backfired set up the game's only score.

The big break came after North Carolina was unable to advance the second half kickoff. Quarterback Bud Wallace tried a quick kick from his 27 on third down. It was blocked by Tackle Carl Holben and Duke took over on the Tar Heel 37.

Three plays netted three yards. On fourth down Cox dropped back and taking plenty of time—found Powers on the three. The Duke Halfback was hit as he caught the ball by Halfback Dick Bunting but went the rest of the way. End Mike Souchak converted and the scoring was over.

Duke Ends on One

Thereafter Duke spent the rest of the game fighting off North Carolina threats. Duke never again seriously threatened until the waning seconds. Then the Blue Devils went 32 yards before losing the ball on the one as the game ended.

Cox, who entered the game as No. 2 in the nation in total offense with 1,852 yards in nine games, picked up 143 more today.

He gained 81 yards in 23 rushes and completed four of 12 passes for 62 yards. For the season he totaled 397 plays, three short of the record set 13 years ago by Davey O'Brien of Texas Christian.

Although the stadium's 46,000 capacity was potentially filled months ago when all tickets were sold, the biting cold and light early morning snow kept about 6000 fans away from the game.

North Carolina's great center, Irvin Holdash, left the game with an injured left knee shortly before Duke scored never to return.

HE CAUGHT BIG ONE—Teammates of Bert Rechichar fall on his neck in the dressing room, congratulating him for catching the pass that gave Tennessee a 7-0 victory over Kentucky yesterday in Knoxville, Tenn., before 45,000 fans in 10 degree weather block on the play and was prone. Tennessee center Bob Davis fell on the ball on the Kentucky 36.

Halfback Hal Payne took the Vols 12 yards deeper with a flashy turn of speed around right end, but the Vols were being stalled on fourth down when Lauricella and Rechichar collaborated for the big 7 points.

Kentucky had never met up with Tennessee's kind of football before today. The arctic weather may have made the ball hard to handle, but Tennessee's ferocious crashing of the Wildcats' ball carriers also had its effect, and nine times Kentucky was jarred into fumbling the ball with Vols pouncing on eight of their fluffs.

So thoroughly did Tennessee whack down the Wildcats' T-formation running game that Parilli, a man with 23 touchdown passes to his credit, was operating a Kentucky attack that was stripped of all deception when he essayed his passes.

In the last half, the Wildcats virtually junked their T-formation to go into an exaggerated double-wing with Parilli getting the ball on the direct pass from center. It was of no use. Never did Kentucky penetrate within 30 yards of a touchdown, achieving that high-water mark only once in each half.

At the day's end, Parilli had completed only 14 of 31 passes and four of them intercepted

What balm there was for the Wildcats today they had to take from their defensive line play when at the start of the fourth quarter they forced Tennessee to give up the ball on the 6-yard line.

That Tennessee drive from the Kentucky 40 stemmed from Jimmy Hill's interception of a Parilli pass, and he carried it 18 yards. Laurichella tore 6 yards around right end for a first down on the 9, and Payne took it to the 1 on third down. The Wildcats then got tough and smeared both of Kozar's plunges at the middle to avert a score.

Doug Atkins, Tennessee's terrific right end, was the man who gave Parilli the most trouble, hounding him on his passing attempts. In the Vols defensive backfield Gordon Polofsky was an impassable barrier when the Wildcats tried to crash.

Kentucky was contained in its own territory until the final minute of the first half when Parilli hit Lawson and Webb with passes that carried to the Tennessee 39. But Polofsky called a halt by intercepting Parilli's next pitch aimed at Lawson.

Tennessee threatened to score early after Campbell recovered a punt that Fusi fumbled on the Kentucky 42, and a long pass from Lauricella to Rechichar, carried to the Wildcats' 20. But a clipping penalty set the Vols back and the threat evaporated.

They charged back before the quarter ended, Lauricella scrambling 23 yards around end behind powerful blocks by Gruble and Haslam before McClendon brought him down on the Kentucky 30. But a fourth-down pass from the Kentucky 14 misfired.

So fierce was the second-half battling with the Wildcats striving for the tying touchdown, that the ball changed hands on fumbles almost as frequently as the bottled, liquid heat was changing hands in the snow-covered stands.

Rechichar intercepted a long pass aimed at Zaranka by Parilli and then fumbled as Zaranka made the tackle on the 50-yard line. The loose ball lay at the feet of the unknowing Zaranka and Rechichar picked himself up to recover it. On the next play, Rechichard permitted Kentucky Guard Pat James to steal the ball.

James was off and running for what might have been the tying touchdown, but unfortunately for Kentucky he is a guard and was meat for Tennessee Tackle Jack Stroud who charged him from behind for a tackle on the Tennessee 30.

On the next play, Lawson fumbled a flanker pass from Parilli and the scoring threat was averted when Holohan, a guard, pounced on the ball for Tennessee.

After missing a touchdown by a foot early in the fourth quarter, Tennessee gained the ball again on the Kentucky 25 when Smith pounced on a fumble by Brainard, and Dick Martin recovered for Kentucky.

Pass by Lauricella Decides Close Game

Seven minutes before it was all over, Kentucky was still very much in the ball game after Bob Gain recovered a fumble by Ernsberger on the Tennessee 37. But Stroud smeared Parilli for a 10-yard loss on one passing try, and he lost four more on a second. His fourth down pass was intercepted by Polofsky, and the Wildcats now were completely tamed.

'Bama Routs Florida, 41-13, In Orange Bid

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 25 (U.P.).—Alabama made a profound impression on Orange Bowl scouts and this frigid "sunshine" State in general today with a 41 to 13 romp over Florida before 16,000 fans.

The Crimson Tide set a new Southeastern Conference record for first downs as Eddie Salem, Bobby Marlow and Butch Avinger pranced at will.

It was the eighth victory in 10 starts for the powerful Crimsons and carried their bowl hopes high with 95 points scored in the last two games against six opponents. Last week they mauled Georgia Tech, 54 to 19.

The Tide broke the first-down mark by making 25 today, for a total of 188 for the season.

The Tide scored the first time it took possession of the ball as Salem climaxed a 70-yard drive with a six-yard run around right end.

Suitcase Ed Salem did it again in the second period by carrying from the 8-yard stripe after 'Bama had driven from its own 43. He added his third touchdown minutes later after throwing a long aerial from his own 33 to End Al Lary on the Florida 5. Salem traveled around right end for the score.

Joe Ernst's 16 Passes Lead Tulane Over Vanderbilt, 35-6

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 25 (AP). Quarterback Joe Ernst uncorked a lethal passing attack to lead Tulane to a 35-6 victory over hopelessly outclassed Vanderbilt in a Southeastern Conference football game today.

Ernst flipped his passes with cool precision. He set up all but one Tulane touchdown to outshine by far Vandy's celebrated passing quarterback, Bill Wade. Ernst connected with 16 of 28 attempts.

Tulane scored in the first three periods and coasted in with subs playing much of the last half.

Tulane scored midway of the opening period when Halfback Harold Waggoner exploded through the line for 48 yards. From there out, Ernst's passes, mixed with an effective ground game, kept the Vandy defense baffled.

Halfback George Kinek intercepted three of Wade's passes and all three led to Tulane touchdowns. His first two came in the second quarter.

After the first interception, Ernst whipped three straight passes, the last a 39-yard touchdown toss to Kinek. The drive carried 65 yards. The second was followed by four good Ernst passes and Ronnie Kent's 15-yard run that brought the ball to the 3. Waggoner went over for the score.

The second half scores were added by Fullback Kent, and a 27-yard pass from Ernst to End Ferdie Kibodeaux. Vandy scored in the last minute of play on a 13-yard pass from Wade to Halfback Nelson Burton.

All-Star Show At Turner's

An all-star boxing show featuring local and out-of-town talent is scheduled for Turner's Arena tomorrow night.

Three eight round matches, a special five-round event and a four-round preliminary opening the show at 8:45 p. m. EST comprise the card.

Johnny Pratt, former all-Army middleweight champion, will step out against Arthur Bethea, another local scrapper, in one of the fives.

Another local fighter, lightweight Chink Williams, meets Irish Bobby Lloyd of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., who recently whipped top contender Arthur King.

The third eight-rounder will bring together two out-of-town punchers who are pointing for a bout with Julian Keene at Turner's December 18.

They are Leroy Coleman, of Patterson, N. J., and Jimmy "Kid" Lee, of New York, who has won 28 fights against only three losses in three years.

Miller Leads Wake Forest Over South Carolina, 14 to 7

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 25 (U.P.). Battering Bill Miller led Wake Forest's steamed-up Baptists to a 14-to-7 victory today over a South Carolina eleven whose offense was slower than molasses on the frozen field.

Only 10,000 of the 17,000 fans who bought tickets braved the 23-degree winds sweeping Carolina stadium to watch. Most of them went home by the end of the third period.

Miller's pile-driver line smashes shattered South Carolina's shivering line for most of Wake Forest's 17 first downs. Carolina's steamboat Steve Wadiak was almost stopped in his tracks by the Deacon's defensive charges.

Early in the second period, Wake Forest Quarterback Ed Kissell, unable to find a receiver, crashed through the Gamecock line with center smashes for 52 yards as the third period began, and Jones toe-danced through a hole in the left side of the Carolina line to score from the 3.

Quarterback Billy Stephens, the only Gamecock field general still fit for action, got away for South Carolina's score with 3 and a half minutes left in the game. Trapped on Wake Forest's 36, he looked vainly for a receiver, then raced wide to his right through Wake Forest's secondary to the end zone.

Magdziak, Lewis Each Score Twice

NORFOLK, Va., Nov. 25 (U.P.). Two slippery ball carriers who broke loose for long runs through snow and sleet paced William and Mary to a startling 34-0 upset of North Carolina State today as the Williamsburg Indians battled to prove their coach wrong when he said the season was a total loss.

Before a crowd of 12,000 that dwindled in the freezing wind, Fullback Ed Magdziak and Tailback Dickie Lewis cantered to two touchdowns each. They and the other William and Mary players pushed Coach Rube McCray's words down his throat.

It was William and Mary's third victory in 10 starts.

Magdziak swept to one of his touchdowns on an 86-yard run and Lewis chipped in an 83-yard canter for one of his scores. Lewis also kicked four extra points.

North Carolina State's single wing attack bogged down time after time when the Wolfpack neared the William and Mary goal.

The victors got their first scoring break when a bad punt by Ed Mooney went dead on the State 34. A holding penalty against State helped advance the ball to the 3 where Magdziak bulled over.

A fumble by Mooney gave William and Mary the ball on the State 24 and they scored again, this time despite a holding penalty. Magdziak provided 30 yards to the 6 on a screen pass from Lewis. Wingback Ed Weber scored on a reverse.

Mooney won a punting duel that left William and Mary on its own 8. But Magdziak broke loose for 86 yards on the third play.

Lewis spurted 83 yards after a sweep around left end to score midway in the third period.

He scored from 2 yards out in the final period to finish off a drive set up by a short State kick to their own 33.

North Carolina State's O'Rourke returned the opening kickoff 62 yards but William and Mary held on the 12. Other State scoring threats in the third period stalled on the 15 and 17.

Georgia Tech Routs Davidson

ATLANTA, Nov. 25 (AP).—Georgia Tech's Joe Salome passed for two early touchdowns and called strategy for three more in the first half today as Tech downed Davidson, 46-14.

Tech sent in the reserves in the final half, obviously conserving strength for the traditional game with Georgia next week.

Subfreezing temperatures kept the passing game of both Tech and Davidson erratic. Salome put on the best passing performance. Davidson's Auburn Lambeth seldom had time to get set until the final half when the Jackets were playing reserves.

Even then, the cold made receivers' fingers brittle, and the frozen ground caused more than one receiver to slip after getting into the clear.

Bowl-Hopeful Clemson Rolls Over Auburn

AUBURN, Ala., Nov. 25 (AP).—Clemson, fired with post-season bowl ambitions, lambasted unlucky Auburn, 41-0 today.

The victory, highlighted by a brief flurry of fisticuffs which brought almost the entire squads of both schools rushing onto the field in the fourth period, left Clemson undefeated for the season.

And it virtually clinched an invitation for Coach Frank Howard's crew to either the Orange or Gator Bowl games on New Year's Day.

For the Auburn Tigers it was the ninth loss in as many starts this year and the sixth game in which they were held scoreless. The 11,000 shivering fans had the unhappy distinction of being the first Homecoming Day crowd ever to see Auburn lose.

Miscues were costly for Coach Earl Brown's Bengals. Fumbles opened the way for two of Clemson's six touchdowns and a pass interference penalty led to another.

Charging Fred Cone, the South Carolinians' flashy fullback, started the scoring spree in the opening period with the first of his four touchdowns.

Caps Lose, 77-67, Only 635 on Hand

By Dave Heller
Post Reporter

It was cold for the Washington Caps last night in more ways than one. They dropped their National Basketball Association game to the Syracuse Nationals, 77-67, and the stinging sleet kept away all but 635 hardy fans.

The Caps were ahead only twice during the game, once for a few seconds while Freddie Scolari sank a free throw for the first point of the contest and again when another Scolari free throw gave them a 16-15 edge shortly after the second quarter began. Otherwise it was Syracuse all the way.

The Nats took charge of the game in the second quarter. Their slick floor work opened short set shots under the basket which the locals seemed unable to cope with. The winners led, 32-23, at half-time.

Syracuse moved far out in front shortly after the second half began. Billy Gabor eluded his guards to score basket after basket and Syracuse led, 40-28, five minutes after the third quarter started.

Washington's big Don Otten made a heroic effort to pull the game out of the fire with 22 points in the last half

The Caps pulled up to within two points of Syracuse, 57-55, in the fourth quarter. Then their nemesis, the mouldly old sleeper play, gave the Dolph Schayes two easy baskets and the Nats a 61-55 lead. Syracuse won going away from that point.

George Ratkovicz and Gabor both scored 17 points for high point honors for the Nats. Tonight Washington plays at Syracuse.

GW Rolls for Rowland's 3d Victory Over GU

Georgetown T. D.

Georgetown's Hoyas seemed to be getting away on the right (though slippery) foot when they scored three-and-a-half minutes after the opening whistle at Griffith Stadium yesterday. Here's the touchdown (right) as Bugs Thompson slogs through the mud toward the goal. Andy Davis (18) is giving chase. Thompson took a pass from Frank Mattingly and stepped off 35 yards. The over-all gain, pass and run, covered 63 yards. Lou Ciarrocca, on the ground, barely missed the runner. Note the solitary fan enjoying (?) the solitude of the bleachers. Thompson (below) is just about to take a rest on the bench directly after scoring the touchdown. The washtub, filled with hot scoring the touchdown. The washtub, filled with hot water, was used by the Hoyas to clean up after coming off the field

G. W. Touchdown

The Colonials showed they, too, could pass for a touchdown in the second quarter when speedy Charley Jones raced into the clear and grabbed a 5-yarder (top) from Andy Davis. He raced 10 yards (below) and over the goal line for the TD. Jones' nifty appearance (he's so clean) was in sharp contrast to the muddy condition of the other gridiron warriors at this point. He had come in to the game just before taking the pay-off pass

Bo All Steamed Up, Calls GW 'Best Bunch I've Ever Coached'

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S dressing room was hot and steaming after yesterday's 7-6 victory over Georgetown, and mud-soaked players were hppping over benches and slapping each other on the back.

The door opened and in from the cold, bleak outside came Coach Bo Rowland. Somebody shushed down the hubub, and Rowland walked to the center of the room. You couldn't see his eyes for the steam on his glasses.

Slowly, Bo removed his specs, and after a pause, he said in a shaky voice, "Ah jest wanted to tell you boys that you're the finest bunch ah've evah coached. Ah mean it, too, especially you seniors. Ah want to thank all of you.

"There ain't a star among you. You're the finest bunch of boys ah evah coached," he said again, and then he turned and walked out into the cold again. And nobody could see his eyes.

His boys let out a terrific cheer and the bench-hopping and back-slapping started all over again.

GEORGETOWNERS WENT FROM GRIM TO GRIMMER AS THE GAME NEARED THE END

IT WAS an especially enjoyable victory for nine G. W. seniors who completed their careers undefeated by Georgetown. In their first season, 1947, they tied the Hoyas, 0-0, and in the next two they beat the Hoyas, 13-7 and 28-7.

A tenth G. W. senior, Johnny Shullenbarger, played in the 18-6 loss to the Hoyas five years ago. Shully dropped out of school in 1947 and returned in '48 and '49. Yesterday he kicked the winning extra point and did all of G. W.'s fine punting.

This, by the way, was Shully's first year as a place-kicker, and he made 18 out of 21. He took up place-kicking as a necessity when last year's extra-point kicker, Frankie Cavallo, graduated.

The other G. W. boys who played their last game yesterday are Charlie Butler, Pete Cordelli, Talbot Dredge, Jim Feula, Charlie Gunner, Charlie Jones, Jimmy Kline, Walt Savage and Bill Szanyi.

FOR GEORGETOWN, the most heartsick boy was Senior Dick Haesler, who missed the extra point which would have given his team a tie. Later he tried a field goal, but it was blocked.

Haesler had no excuses for missing the extra-point try. "I had a good shot at the ball, I just didn't hit it right," he said. Before yesterday he had converted 13 out of 14 times.

Other Hoya seniors who bowed out without a victory over G. W. are Joe Pallotta, Bob Versprille, Bob Noppinger, Dick Barba, Art Sheridan, Bob Fortunato, Joe Hitselberger, Paul Wintermyer, Bill Orsini and Bill Wickheiser.

THERE was some comic relief along with awful playing conditions.

In the second quarter, Joe Kennelly was sent into the game, but on the way out he slipped on the slop and fell on his face.

Officials were wearing towels as aprons, and two helpers were on the sidelines, also equipped to wipe off the ball. A couple of times, the officials and their sideline aides got their signals mixed, and the teams lined up with two footballs on the field.

In the third quarter, G. W. called for a first down measurement, and the officials had to get down on their hands and knees to find the chalk line.

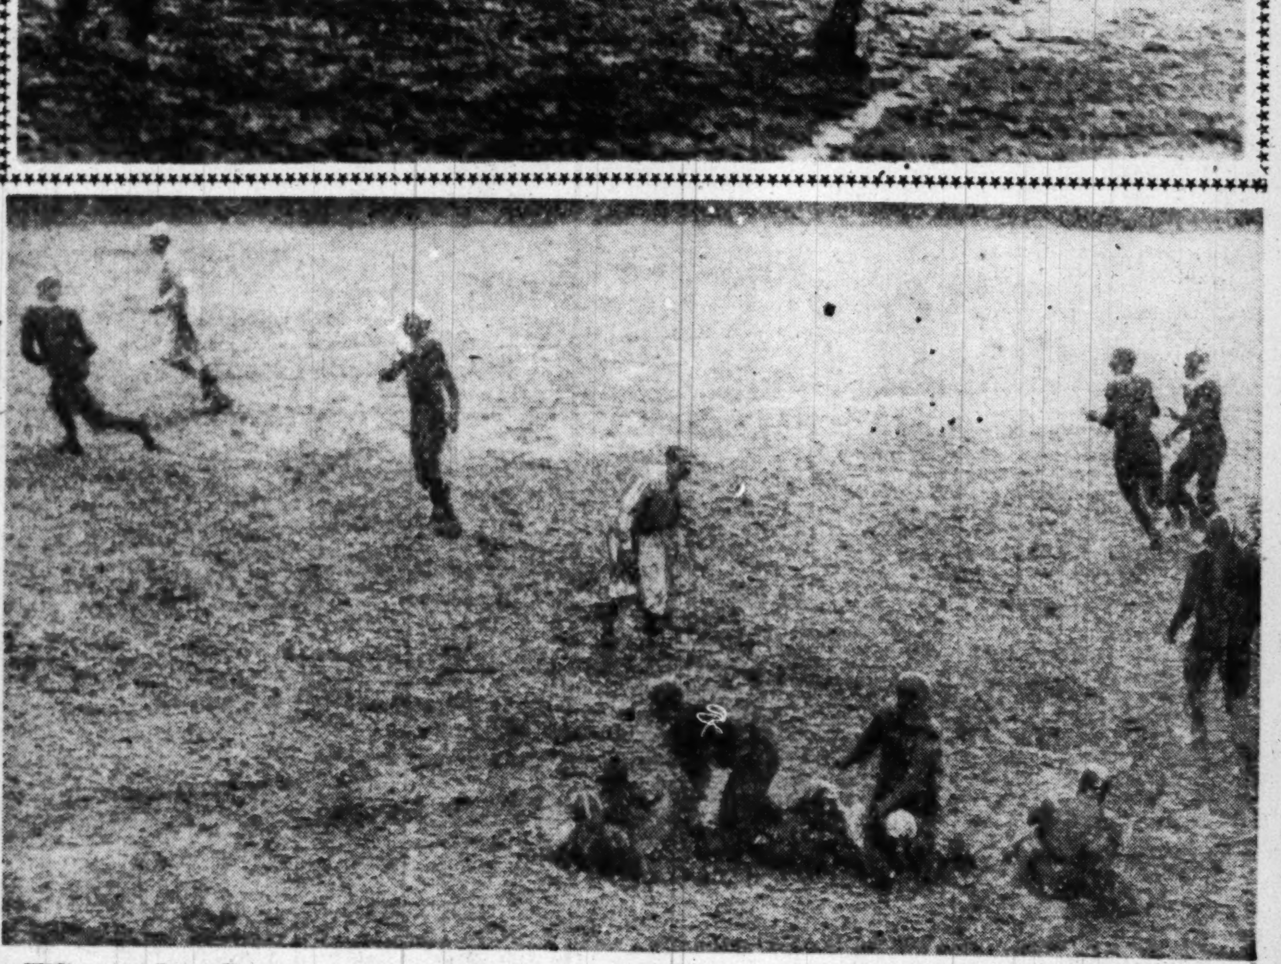
In the fourth quarter, Referee J. D. Rogers threw his handkerchief on the ground to signal a penalty, and then had to call for help. He couldn't find his handkerchief in the mud.

THROUGH IT ALL, the crowd sat and seemed to enjoy the rough weather.

G. W.'s band kept the [illegible]ks in good spirits with its timely tune-playing. When Bill Szanyi caught an Andy Davis p[illegible], leading up to the Colonials' touchdown, the band struck up "Zena Zena."

OF COURSE, at the end, there was the usual goalpost scuffling. Frank Close, who played end at G. W. a year ago, before he graduated, got himself a big chunk of the wood, but four Georgetown boys ganged up on him to take it away.

Two policemen saw the incident, and justice prevailed. They returned the trophy to Close. You might say it was another Close victory for G. W.



Then the Snow— It was tough enough for the Colonials and Hoyas at the very start of the game. Rain had turned the field into a quagmire and muddied uniforms weighed down the footballers. To cap the undesirable conditions the snow arrived later in the game. But they're mushing through, however

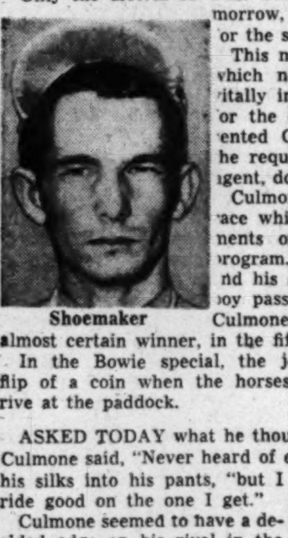
Saddle Battle of Century

Culmone-Shoemaker Duel Slated Monday

BOWIE, Nov. 25.—After battling with the breadth of the Nation separating them, Joe Culmone and Willie Shoemaker will be withing yelling distance of each other on this track Monday.

Only the arrival of West Coast Willie, scheduled to fly in tomorrow, is needed to complete the set-up for the saddle battle of a century.



Shoemaker

This morning was marked by a duel, in which neither participated but each was vitally interested—the selection of mounts for the day's card. Slim Edwards represented Culmone with Frenchy Bowen, at the request of Harry Silbert, Shoemaker's agent, doing business for the Texas youth.

Culmone, as usual, took a mount in every race while Shoemaker had definite assignments on eight horses on the nine-race program. Bowen will suggest to Shoemaker and his agent, upon their arrival, that the boy pass up and take a rest period when Culmone rides Brookmeade's Steadfast, an almost certain winner, in the fifth event.

In the Bowie special, the jockeys will be determined by a flip of a coin when the horses, Chiloe 2d and Curruhuinca arrive at the paddock.

ASKED TODAY what he thought of the horses for the big race, Culmone said, "Never heard of either of 'em," adding as he shoved his silks into his pants, "but I ride good on the one I get."

Culmone seemed to have a decided edge on his rival in the caliber of horses, at least two of his mounts, Steadfast (fifth) and Sunglow (sixth) are probable odds-on choices. In addition he is slated to handle Mary Ann in the first; Cock Feather in the second; Red Swing in the third, Rocky Heights (Blinky B second call) in the fourth, Blue Hills in the seventh and Beret in the eighth.

Shoemaker's lineup includes: Sun Elsie (Ardent Miss second call) in the first; Dawty in the second; High Count in the third; Agararian-U in the fourth; Adopt in the sixth; Colonel Mike in the seventh and Alluring (Loyal Worker second call) in the eighth.

Should Shoemaker desire to perform in the fifth, first call has been given to Mully S with second call to Combat Boots.

ALTHOUGH CURRUHUINCA appears to be a much better horse than Chiloe 2d, the Shoemaker-Culmone duel is eagerly awaited with the jockey colony here fairly boiling over with excitement. The older boys favor Shoemaker while most of the youngsters are backing Culmone.

The Bowie management was remaining neutral on the relative merits of the boys but was scanning the skies, which scarcely looked flyable this afternoon, and wondering if Shoemaker would get here.

If he does, the Texan, along with Culmone will meet the the press and radio people of the area at a gathering at the Shoreham Hotel tomorrow afternoon.

Shoemaker is booked to fly into New York and will be shuttled by air to Baltimore tomorrow morning. He will motor to Washington early in the afternoon and make his headquarters at the Shoreham. —WALTER HAIGHT.

Thanksgiving Day

Anglers Get Turkey, Fish In One Sweep

By Ralph Murdock

THE PROSPECTS for a cold turkey dinner and no fish loomed for Gus Berlitz, Leon Hayden and your scribe on Thanksgiving Day. At 6:15 a. m. we left the dock at Solomon's Island with Capt. Ed Bowen as guide and headed straight for Point No Point, where our skipper had nailed 81 stripers the previous day.

Our cruise down to the ligh house and back to Cove Poir* availed nothing. We saw only a few gulls and the situation looked so gloomy that no one had the courage to even wet a line. The bewitching hour of 1 p. m. had arrived and our promise to be home for turkey dinner at 2:30 seemed certain to be fu.filled.

As we were making preparations to head back to shore, Bowen, who always hates to give up fishing, took a final peep through his binoculars. He excitedly passed the word on to us that he had spoted a "zillion" gulls up the bay just west of James Point in ship channel.

The first fish was nailed by Berlitz—a 12-pounder. In rapid succession four more were boated and a buoy (a brown gallon jug) for a marker was hastily thrown over. Another batch of gulls showed about a mile southward so we headed in that direction.

Two other flocks of gulls ar peared on our portside which left us in a quandry. We picked the wrong flock of gulls and drew a blank.

THE FIRST "ZILLION" gulls were again spotted and back to the "little brown jug" marker. We went and there we stayed until dark. The total catch revealed 52 good fish—six limit size, 17 from 5 to 10 pounds, and the balance 3-pounders. Lest we forget—we also had a hot turkey dinner, but the reception was only lukewarm.

The only baits used were Nos. 14, 15, 17, 18 and 19 size Tony Acetta spoons with yellow feathers. Ten and 12-ounce weights on steel lines did the rest. Eleven monster rock beside the catch were hooked and each ended up with a free lure in his mouth. We just couldn't land 'em. Bowen pulled the best shot of the day when he hauled in a 15-pounder with a broken fishing rod.

Gordon Stinnett, in charge of the duck at the Rod 'N' Reel Club, claims that the Thanksgiving catch for the fishing boats was the best he had seen in years.

Culmone Has One Winner On Wet Day

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

BOWIE, Nov. 25.—Hasty House Farms' Seward made every post a winning one this dreary afternoon and won the $10,000 added Prince Georges Autumn Handicap before 8113 hardy turf fans. Jimmy Lynch guided the winner into the wire five lengths ahead of Cross Bell Ranch's Friendly Frank with Inseparable, Seward's stablemate, third.

Joe Culmone, aboard Inseparable, was held to one winner for the day.

The fans who saw racing begin in a drizzle and end in a budding snowstorm, backed the Seaward-Inseparable duo with gusto and considered the $3.80 win mutuel as ample reward. The winner was clocked in 1:47 4-5 for the mile and a sixteenth over a sloppy track.

Weather Holds Crowd Down

Both the crowd and the betting was far below the expectations of the management, wagering totalling $773,278. Many Washington fans arrived late or hot at all, due to the flood waters at the Peace Cross at the Defense Highway junction with the Baltimore Boulevard.

As the feaure began, it looked like a setup for another Culmone winner. Seaward set the pace and Inseparable was second as the field went into the clubhouse turn. Friendly Frank was closest at this point.

At the far turn, Inseparable apparently was supposed to come on and take the big money. However, the son of Unbreakable failed to respond when Culmone called on him. Lynch looked back, saw High Trend moving and quickened the cadence of his riding.

Victory was worth $7600 to the winner who has a good mud mark and is by Pilate out of the Mare Flota. He carried 118 pounds to 122 for Inseparable and 108 for Friendly Frank. Three scratches simmered the field down to six horses.

Culmone's lone winner came in the second race on W. Y. Goldborough's Loveable Lady and had to survive a photo finish before her number went in the top slot. Paying $10, she put the finishing touches on a $174.80 daily double.

The day's riding honors were gathered by Herb Claggett, the Cambridge, Md., veteran. He booted home three winners.

A BEAR GETS LOOSE—Jim Monachino (35) of California slices through the Stanford line on a 21-yard gain at Berkeley yesterday. Russ Pomeroy, Stanford tackle, makes a futile attempt to stop him. The game ended in a 7-7 tie there Quarterback Jim Marion Marinos passed to Fullback John Olszewski on the Stanford 30 as the final gun ended—too soon for the Bears.

California Stunned by Stanford, 7-7

California scored in the third period on a break to take a 7-to-0 lead. Stanford received the kickoff, but on the first play Harry Hugasian fumbled and Don Robison recovered for California on Stanford's 31.

On the next play, Marinos did a beautiful job of faking, first to Olszewski and then to Monachino. Finally he handed the ball to Pete Schabarum, who sauntered around the left end and then turned on a burst of speed to go the distance. Les Richter converted.

But the powerful Stanford air attack came buzzing back. Late in the fourth period, Schabarum fumbled and John Bonetti recovered for Stanford on the California 37. From there, Gary Kerkorian passed twice to McColl on a march to the 9. The little quarterback then tossed one into the end zone to Boyd Benson. Kerkorian converted to tie it up at 7 to 7.

Stanford appeared to have scored again in the fourth quarter, on a Kerkorian pass to Bob White in the end zone from 32 yards out.

But Stanford drew a double penalty on offside and defensive pushing to stop the scoring threat.

The field was fairly dry, but mud in spots ruined any long run attempts. The major thing that may have kept the score down was the sensational punting of Robison for California and Dick Horn for the Indians.

As the result of the tie, California finished the season with a 9-0-1 record and won the undisputed Pacific Coast Conference championship for the second year in a row. Three years ago, the Bears tied with Oregon for the crown.

Dodgers May Reveal Pilot Choice Tuesday

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (U.P.)—The Brooklyn Dodgers will hold a press conference Tuesday at which they "hope to name their 1951 manager," Vice President Fresco Thompson announced today.

Thompson said Club President Walter O'Malley planned the announcement for the conference, but that it was possible the announcement would have to be put off.

"The new manager has not definitely been agreed upon," Thompson said. "It is our hope to have a new manager by Wednesday when we go to St. Petersburg, Fla., for the winter meetings."

Holy Cross Nips Temple

WORCESTER, Mass., Nov. 25 (AP).—The Holy Cross Crusaders yielded an early touchdown to Temple University today and then came back to outplay the visiting Owls for a 26-21 triumph on Fitton Field which was swept by a 43-mile-an-hour wind.

A crowd held to 5000 by the high wind and intermittent rain squalls, cheered the Crusaders, who bounced back after a blocked punt set up Temple's opening score.

Jack Cullity, a defensive back until today when he blossomed forth as a full-fledged "two-way" player, scored the final Holy Cross touchdown, sweeping right end untouched for 3 yards early in the final quarter.

Temple fought back for a touchdown in this final quarter. After a Holy Cross punt, Paul McKernan passed twice to Caterina for 50 yards, setting the ball on the 3, and Caterina took it over two plays later.

sixth touchdown on the longest and most spectacular run, 69 yards, in the mild afternoon sunshine. He took a pitchout on the Oklahoma 31, reversed his field twice and scored going away, with a timely block by End Jack Lockett.

Reynolds scored 23 points with a total gain of 899 yards on 25 carries, while Vessels gobbled up 208 yards in 18 tries, scoring 18 points. Reynolds and Jim Weatherall of Oklahoma kicked a total of 12 conversions without a miss.

Oklahoma scored first on a 16-yard quarterback keep by Claude Arnold followed by a 67-yard drive in eight plays, with Arnold passing to Leon Heath for the touchdown.

Then Reynolds got rolling and scored three times. His third tally capped a shifting, dodging dash for 16 yards through the amazed Sooner secondary.

But the Sooners came back with a 7-yard touchdown by Vessels, set up by a 58-yard Arnold-to-Heath pass. The score was then tied 21-all. In the third period Arnold scored after a 75-yard drive. Vessels ran over from the 9 after a Nebraska fumble, and then took off on his 69-yard run.

Nebraska's Fran Nagle scored on a quarterback keeper play after a passing spurt, but Vessels passed 24 yards to End John Reddell for another OU score in the last period.

Nebraska's Gerald Ferguson went over from the 6 in the final minute, but it was just a gesture.

The faking and wizard ball-handling plus some of the greatest kicking the Cotton Bowl has seen made Isbell stand out for Baylor. He averaged 42.3 on his punting.

Buddy Parker, lithe little Baylor halfback, was the leading ground-gainer with 67 yards on 15 carries.

Rote picked up 30 yards rushing and caught five passes for 51 yards. He also kicked for an average of 27.8.

Fred Benners, the SMU passer, completed 14 of 24 throws for 160 yards. Isbell connected on nine of 21 for 94 yards.

McElhenny Scores Five

SPOKANE, Nov. 25 (AP).—Don Heinrich cranked up the Washington touchdown machine today to squash the Washington State Cougars, 52 to 21, cracking two records himself and cutting Hugh McElhenny loose for a third.

Heinrich pitched 17 completions to wreck a National record set in 1947 by Chuck Conerly of Mississippi. The 17 gave him 134 for the season. Conerly had 133.

Don rifled two touchdown passes to break by one the Coast Conference mark of 12 set in 1949 by Jim Powers of USC. McElhenny scored five touchdowns as Heinrich fed him the ball steadily in a successful effort to crack the conference seasonal yardage mark of 1010 set by California's Jackie Jensen in 1948.

Hurryin' Hugh capped his day's work with an 84-yard touchdown canter in the final seconds, piled up 296 yards—net—to boost his total to 1107.

Woodberry Rally Ties Episcopal

Special to The Washington Post

WOODBERRY FOREST, Va., Nov. 25.—Episcopal High of Alexandria and Woodberry Forest battled to a 14-14 tie in their fiftieth meeting, played in a gale and snowstorm, this afternoon.

A Homecoming Day crowd saw Episcopal jump to a 14-0 halftime lead, then saw Woodberry Forest fight back to gain a tie in the last two quarters.

The Maroons scored in the first quarter after an exchange of punts put the ball at midfield. The march was climaxed when Fullback Jim Thornton went over from the 4. Tedd Merry converted and gave the visitors a 7-0 lead.

Anes Drummond took a Woodberry punt on his own 15-yard line and swished 85 yards through the mud to score for Episcopal in the second period. When Merry added the extra point, Episcopal held a 14-0 advantage.

Woodberry scored on the second half kickoff when Charley Bourland, on a reverse, raced 50 yards to a touchdown, doing a tightrope act down the sidelines. Buddy Heilig converted.

Bourland scored the home team's last touchdown in the final period taking a pass from 9 yards out. Hellig's accurate conversion saved Woodberry from defeat.

The series remains tied as a result of today's deadlock, with each team winning 23 contests and 4 ending in ties.

AT BOWIE

DEAR FOLKS:

The races were over. I was sitting in my car waiting for my star riders. A rotund fellow and a plump blonde, both looking rather dejected, stopped to rest, unaware I was within hearing range. "You know Pop," said she of the platform-sole shoes, "I was saving my money to buy you a Christmas present. Now it's gone." Her companion snapped, "Same goes for me, kid." With all the horses here to choose from, why did they have to pick a couple of Argentine horses for the match race between Culmone and Shoemaker? A couple of Maryland breds would have served the purpose. In fact, I would prefer Hy against Miss Prime. At lease I can pronounce their names. See you on the rail. —BILL.

Bierman's Finale

Minnesota Bows, 14-0, To Wisconsin

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 25 (AP). Senior Bob Petruska who lost his quarterback job in midseason, came back as a halfback today to lead Wisconsin to a 14-0 victory over Minnesota.

The triumph, Wisconsin's first in 5 years over Minnesota, closed out the Badgers' most successful season in 8 years, with a record of five Big Ten successes against two defeats.

Petruska started the season as Wisconsin's regular quarterback. He didn't click and the job was turned over to Johnny Coatta. Today Petruska was the big wheel in both Badger touchdowns in a battle staged before 45,000 fans in bright but below freezing weather.

Petruska ran for 33 yards in Wisconsin's second period touchdown drive which covered 70 yards, and rammed over from the 1 for the score. In the final period he passed from Wisconsin's 32 to End Tilden Meyers, who was hauled down from behind on the Minnesota 14. Two plays later Jim Hammond cracked over from the 12 for the touchdown. Coatta made both conversions.

Minnesota fought valiantly to give Bernie Bierman a victory in his final game as head coach. Led by Kermit Klefsaas, the Gophers went 46 yards in the opening quarter, only to lose the ball on downs on the 8. In the second period, Minnesota put together a 32-yard drive, but again lost the ball on the 8.

Bierman, who resigned recently after 14 years as Minnesota's head coach during which his teams won outright or shared Big Ten titles six times, bowed out with his worst record. Minnesota won only one game, a two-touchdown victory last week over Purdue.

Fired Up Purdue Whips Indians, 13-0

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Nov. 25 (U.P.). Purdue's fired-up Boilermakers teamed with stinging 15-degree temperature to win their season finale from Down-State Big-Ten-rival Indiana today, 13 to 0.

While 45,000 fans shivered in Rass-Ade stadium, both teams fumbled away scoring chances in the bitter cold and Indiana's passing game suffered particularly.

Purdue hadn't won a game since ending Notre Dame's winning streak at 39 games early in the season.

Junior Halfback John Durham got the Boilermakers off on the right foot when he returned Jerry Van Ooyen's game-opening kickoff 85 yards for a touchdown. Samuels converted and actually, that was all Purdue needed. In the second period, Sub Quarterback Curtis Jones intercepted Dick Ashburner's pass and raced 26 yards for the score.

rolled out of the end zone for a safety.

Then Tony Momsen came through with his block of Janowicz' punt and that was the ball game.

It was another wierd football contest on a wierd day. Some 83,000 fans had bought tickets, but 20,000 of them refused to buck the stinging snow and biting wind that coated the field with a white blanket and obliterated the yard markers and at times, the players themselves.

In the first period, Janowicz and Ortman traded six punts in a matter of 10 plays, the punting duel never ceased. Ohio's fancy-running backs, Walt Klevay and Janowicz, slipped and fell all over themselves as did Michigan's Ortmann and Leo Koceski.

Only three first downs were made and Ohio State got all of them, one by passing and two by rushing. Michigan gained only 27 yards net against 41 for Ohio.

TCU Upsets Rice, 26-14

HOUSTON, Tex., Nov. 25 (AP)—Jumping Jack Floyd made hurdles out of would-be tacklers today while scoring four touchdowns as Texas Christian defeated favored Rice, 26 to 14.

Floyd teamed with Quarterback Gilbert Bartosh, both sophomores, to give lightning thrusts to a TCU attack that otherwise was hampered by Rice recoveries of six of eight Frog fumbles.

After Rice twice had taken first half leads, Floyd kept the Fort Worth team even with touchdown runs of 34 and 63 yards. In the second half he plunged over from the 3 to climax a 73-yard drive and then took an 18-yard pass from Bartosh.

Aggies Blast Kansas State

STILLWATER, Okla., Nov. 25 (AP).—The Oklahoma Aggies, one of football's lesser lights this season, ran wild over another doormat, Kansas State, for a 41-0 victory here today.

The Aggies' 41 points were the most they've scored against any team this season. It gave them four victories. Kansas State is still looking for its second triumph of the year.

UCLA Beats Trojans, 39-0

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 25 (AP).—Sophomore Ted Marleski and the Belligerent Bruins of UCLA ground Southern California into abject submission today, burying the once-proud Trojans under a 39 to 0 score for their fifth and most humiliating defeat of the season.

The Pacific Coast Conference encounter drew 51,906 wildly partisan fans, who saw UCLA roll up 422 yards and throttle USC with only 79. For the long underdog Uclans, it was only the third triumph in 20 meetings with their cross-town foe.

Three touchdowns were by 160-pound Tailback Marleski.

Midway in the first quarter, Marleski scored from the 3 to end a 54-yard thrust. Again in the second, the sophomore sparkplug skipped the final 5 yards, climaxing a 46-yard punch. Marleski went over from the 5 in the last quarter.

Oregon State Tops Oregon, 14 to 2

PORTLAND, Oreg., Nov. 25 (AP). Oregon State slipped and slithered in the mud of Multnomah Stadium today but their prize sophomore fullback, Sam Baker, found the footing to his liking and carried State to a 14-2 victory over Oregon.

Baker scored all the important points, diving 2 yards to one touchdown and scampering 60 yards to another. In between, he also yielded Oregon a safety, fumbling, then getting caught behind his own goal line.

A crowd estimated at 26,800 watched. The day was warm and dry but the field was sloppy from earlier rains.

Fordham Tops NYU in Near Gale

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (AP).—Sub Fullback Phil Saba sloshed through the mud and rain for two touchdowns today as Fordham whipped New York University, 13-0, in the gale-swept Polo Grounds.

Only 1500 friends and relatives whose television sets apparently were on the blink braved the near-hurricane winds to see this twenty-eighth "Battle of the Bronx." Some 12,700 had bought tickets in advance.

Swirling tarpaper, ripped from the ball park roof, showered the field while the driving rain made conditions the worst imaginable in this battle of nine fumbles. A facade in front of the press box was ripped away late in the game.

Fordham took advantage of two breaks of the game to score early in the first period and again early in the third. Bill Payne's fumble of Jim Erickson's punt was recovered by the Rams' Ed Boyle of the NYU 27. Dick Doheny's pass to Al Pfeifer carried to the 2. Then Saba squirmed over.

A bad fourth-down pass from Center Bob Lynch that lost 39 yards rocked NYU back on its mud cleats in the third. Bill Ranieri, back to punt, never had a chance. It took Fordham three smashes to bull over with Saba going from the 2. Ed Kozdeba who made the first conversion, was wide this time.

Colorado Mouls Aggies, 31 to 6

FORT COLLINS, Colo., Nov. 25 (AP).—Colorado U., out to avenge two humiliating football defeats in a row by Colorado A. & M., did a good job of it today mauling the Aggies 31 to 6 before 14,500, the largest crowd on record for the A. & M. stadium.

The Buffaloes mixed the line smashing of Fullback Mervin Hodel and sharp passing and clever reverses to build a 18-0 lead in the third period. They slammed the door on all but one Aggie threat.

Rex Layne, Upset Winner Over Walcott, Eyes Shot at Charles' Title—Pretty Soon

By Murray Rose

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (AP).—Rex Layne, boxing's newest sensation, and manager Marv Jenson, mentioned the name of heavyweight champion Ezzard Charles today and not a person in the International Boxing Club blinked an eye.

If Jenson had spoken of a possible Layne-Charles match before last night's Walcott-Layne scrap, they would have called for a straitjacket. But Layne, Jenson and I. B. C. matchmaker Al Weill were vindicated last night when the 22-year-old ex-GI thoroughly whipped Walcott in a 10-round Madison Square Garden upset.

Blood streaming down his face from a deep cut over his left eye, the pride of Utah carried the fight to the 36-year-old veteran and wore him down with punishing rights to the body.

A 5-to-1 underdog, the Lewistown larruper scored the boxing upset of the year.

Dr. Vincent Nardiello tied up the gash with 10 stitches and told Jenson to lay off his gladiator for about two months.

Jenson had expressed confidence right along that Rex could beat Walcott. He now feels just as confident the former paratrooper can take the crown from Charles.

"But right now," Jenson said, "we're not going to do anything for a couple of months. We're going back to Salt Lake City tomorrow and then Rex and I will fly to Chicago to see the Joe Louis-Cesar Brion fight Wednesday.

"Weill and I just got through talking over plans," continued Jenson, "and we decided to wait and see what happens to the Louis-Brion fight, the Charles-Nick Barone fight in Cincinnati Tuesday, and the Bob Baker-Abel Cestac fight in Cleveland December 4."

Big Red Halts Quakers on 3-Yard Line

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 25 (AP).—Pennsylvania's hopes for a share in the Ivy League championship were drowned in the Franklin Field mud today as the Big Red of Cornell slithered and slid to a 13-6 victory in a driving rain.

A diehard band of 17,846 watched the Big Red push over two touchdowns in the first half and then hold on for dear life to repulse a last quarter Penn drive on the Cornell 3-yard line.

In the final analysis, it was a mud-covered wall of Cornell lineman and a spectacular sophomore punting star, Bill Whelan of Deerfield, Mass., who turned the tide for Cornell.

Penn	STATISTICS	Cornell
5		10
59	Rushing yardage	152
8	Passing yardage	29
5	Passes attempted	3
1	Passes completed	1
0	Passes intercepted	0
10	Punts	10
43	Punting average	35
2	Fumbles lost	4
20	Yards penalized	20

More than 52,000 tickets had been sold but only a third of the ticket holders showed up. They preferred—as sensible human beings—to sit in comfort and watch the game on television.

Penn scored first after Charley Assiff pounced on a fumble by Whelan on the Cornell 17. In nine plays, with Alan Corbo and Francis (Reds) Bagnell doing all the ball carrying, Penn scored its lone touchdown. Corbo cracked center for the final yard. Herb Agocs' conversion try was wide.

Six minutes later and still in the first period, Cornell went ahead to stay. Bagnell fumbled on his 8 a moment after a pass thrust, and Reggie Marchant recovered for Cornell. Three plays later, Jeff Fleischmann smacked over center from the 1 yard line.

Bill Kirk place-kicked the extra point to put the big red one point up, 7 to 6. Late in the second quarter, Cornell put on the best offensive show of the day as the Big Red forward wall opened up huge holes for the backs to slide through. Hal Seidenberg and Stuart Merz did most of the gaining on a 51-yard drive with Seidenberg jolting over from the 1-foot marker. The extra point try was no good.

That drive finished Cornell offensively for the day, but Penn was not equal to the Cornell line, the mud and the punting of Whelan.

Bagnell, before today within 24 yards of a new eastern ground gaining record, failed to make it. Reds gained 33 yards rushing but two huge losses attempting to pass cost him 25 yards in reverse. He hit on only one of five passes for eight yards.

Bagnell's total yardage gained for the season thus stands at 1603 yards. Paul Governali of Columbia established the record of 1610 yards in 1942.

Rocco Calvo, the Cornell passer, tried three, connected once for a gain of 29 yards.

Whelan had a near equal in the punting department in Penn's Harry Warren, but even 50-yard boots weren't gaining ground against Whelan who put the game on ice in the fourth period with a 63-yard kick from his end zone after Penn was stopped on the Cornell 3.

The Penn fourth period thrust got started on the Cornell 29 when Calvo fumbled and Eddie Bell, a great end all day, recovered for Penn. Corbo and Bagnell hit the line to the 18 and from there Reds passed to Warren Horton on the 10. But three line smacks by Corbo and Bagnell and a fourth down pass failed to move the ball beyand the 3.

Cornell thus finished the season with a loss of seven and two defeats to Princeton and Columbia. Penn winds up with six and three, losing to California, Army and Cornell.

Then, Bob Tyler ran 26 yards to a score with Charles Dey converting.

There was no scoring in the second half. The team with the wind at its back punted 40 or 50 yards per kick. The team facing the wind struggled and fumbled with no hope of gaining yardage as the steady rain made the gridiron sloppier each moment.

The referee Albie Booth, wiped off the ball and the players' faces after every play. Once he threw down a flag for a penalty. The wind carried it 30 yards away and he had to chase it, amid laughs from the crowd. He didn't throw it down again.

So severe was the storm here that there were no Western Union wires or telephones available to the football writers covering the game. They finally managed to rig up a radio telephone set-up to get their stories out.

Elis Rally In 4th After 4 Fumbles

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 25 (AP).—Highly favored Yale, which fumbled away its first four scoring chances, finally got rolling in the fourth period to defeat fighting Harvard, 14-6 under gale conditions today before a 40,000 crowd at the Stadium.

Ed Senay turned in the longest run of the sixty-seventh meeting of these ancient football rivals to set up the initial score just after the teams had changed goals for the last time. It was a 33-yard swing around his right end, to the 11, from where Bob Spears banged twice to the four. Then Senay ripped outside left tackle to give the heretofore dismayed Yale cheering section a touchdown to cheer about.

Yale	STATISTICS	Harvard

The terrific wind was behind Johnny Bush when he converted Yale's seventh point, which might have been the clincher but for a crushing Harvard miscue with less than two minutes remaining.

Trailing only 7-0 and with 13 minutes to go, little Carroll Lowenstein defied the almost impossible conditions by launching a desperate passing attack into the teeth of the howling gale.

He started it on the Crimson 16 and completed a heave to Gil O'Neil on the Crimson's 37 and then another that Dave Warden snatched on Yale's 30 before racing down the right sideline into the Elis' end zone.

But Harvard's joy lasted only a few seconds. Dike Hyde's conversion try for a tying point was caught and carried a few feet wide by a sudden squall.

And that hard blow soon was followed by a paralyzing disaster. With less than two minutes left, Yale's Alan Peters booted a wind-blown punt from 35. Its course was so erratic that Harvard Safety Warren Wylie was unable to hold it, and Tackle Joe Finnegan recovered for the Elis on Harvard's 18. Three plays later Spears slashed 4 yards for Yale's second touchdown, and Bush had another easy task converting.

Colonials Down Hoyas Again, 7-6

egy that called for Shullenbarger to boot on first down. It was reminiscent of that employed last season when the Colonials beat Lafayette in a sea of mud in a game that saw 46 punts.

There were 29 yesterday with Georgetown's End Joe Pallotta and Shullenbarger coming out even in a brilliant punting duel. Pallotta, who had one blocked that he recovered, averaged 39 yards for 14 boots; Shullenbarger, 38 for 15.

The Hoyas employed a bit of strategy of their own to take a startling 6-0 lead with the game 3½ minutes old.

On first down, from his own 37, Georgetown's Mattingly threw a long pass that Thompson speared on about the GW 35. GW's Lou Ciarrocca got his hands on Bugs at the 30 and made him lose stride. But Thompson recovered his balance and sped all the way.

That was the last time Georgetown got into Colonial territory until the fourth period.

GW retaliated quickly for the touchdown when one of Shullenbarger's boots paid off. As the first quarter ended, Shullie punted to the Hoya 29.

From scrimmage, Mattingly fumbled and Soph Tackle Tom Flyzik recovered on the Georgetown 26.

Davis to Jones for TD

Davis lost 6, trying to pass, and Cilento, who also couldn't throw, was stopped at the line of scrimmake. But, on third down, Davis completed a pretty 17-yard pass to Bill Szanyi.

GW took time out and the players wiped the mud off their hands, faces and shoes. Charlie Jones, looking conspicuous in a fresh white jersey, went in at left end for the Colonials.

Then Jones went into the right flat, took a pass from Davis and went over untouched for the 15-yard score.

A daring 16-yard punt return to the Hoya 36 by Davis gave the Colonials a chance to wrap up the game before the half ended. Two nice runs by little Bino Barreira, good for a total of 18 yards, gave GW a first down on the Hoya 7.

With little more than a minute left, Davis elected to try four passes. Hardiman and Bob Versprille batted down the first two. Then Davis was hit for a 4-yard loss and End Bernie Keleher smeared him at the 22 to end the threat.

Hard-pressed Georgetown had to stave off GW at its 30 and again at its 22 in the third period.

Thompson Sweeps for 22

In the fourth, when finally they turned on the stadium lights, Georgetown made a couple of desperate bids.

Bugs Thompson turned in sweeps of 12 and 10 yards to reach the Hoya 46. Ralph Charney, running star last week against Holp Cross, went 10 more but fumbled and Lou Ciarrocca recovered for GW on its 45.

The same Ciarrocca saved the game when he intercepted a Mattingly pass on his 30 and returned it to his 45 with a minute to play.

It's always a winning season for GW when it beats Georgetown but today's triumph made it literally so. The victory was its fifth in nine starts.

The loss was Georgetown's seventh in nine games. Last week's victory over Holy Cross saved the Hoyas from having their worst won and lost record in history.

Goal Posts Blown Down

Columbus was played in conditions that were just about as bad. In fact, there was some talk of calling the game, but officials finally decided to play it. The visibility was a flat "zero," and a snowstorm raged. The handful of fans who braved the elements found five inches of snow on their seats.

Last week tickets to this game were being scalped at $50 a pair. Today, a taxicab driver refused a pair in lieu of an 80-cent fare.

The Fordham-New York University clash in the Polo Grounds, New York, was not figured to draw a full house even on a good day. But on this dreary afternoon, no one but a handful of relatives and friends of the players was on hand. The gathering easily could have been fitted into one section of the vast arena—with alternate seats vacant for comfort.

Even an American League hockey game between Cleveland and Providence was called off in Providence. In Philadelphia, Andy Phillip, a member of the Philadelphia Warriors of the National Basketball Association, stepped on a piece of glass when the winds blew the windows of his apartment in.

But nothing stops those cross-country runners. They ran over the Eastern Catholic Intercollegiate Athletic Conference harrier championships in New York. No one was drowned or lost.

Quality and graceful living are built in this sweeping white rambler set distinctively on a corner lot in one of N. Arlington's finest sections. Striking exterior of white brick contrasted with green trim, stone chimney, green and white awnings and a Johns-Mansville Lifetime roof. An interior designed for full living, with 2 very large bedrooms, 2 luxurious Carrara glass baths a 15x24 living room, a delightful dining room, a large kitchen with bay window, and a cedar paneled den that exudes charm. A 12x18 screened porch for summer living completes the one-floor layout. The delicate balance of Williamsburg colors in paint and paper in this home is beyond verbal description. There's also a large basement, plenty of attic storage and an attached garage. The equipment and interior finish are superb and include stainless steel sink and GE Disposall. Hotpoint range, 9.2 cubic ft. refrigerator, Bryant gas a.-c. heat Permagas hot-water heater. Huge ranch house type air circulator for summer cooling (in addition to built-in summer circulator in the furnace). Combination aluminum self-storing storm sash and screens and additional extras too numerous to mention. It is our belief that a home of this quality and in this location can hardly be reproduced today for the asking price of $37,000, and certainly not with required cash payment of only $12,000. SUNDAY, NOVEMBER, 26, 1950

By Charles del Vecchio—The Washington Post

STORYTIME—Beatrice de Margerie, 11-year-old daughter of the Counselor of the French Embassy and Mme. Christian de Margerie, reads the story of Babar, the Elephant, one of the many French books for children which will be on sale at the French Embassy Christmas bazaar to be held November 29. The big white poodle and the doll dressed in French provincial costume are among the toys which will also be sold that day

By Bob Burchette—The Washington Post

GIFT OF THE FOREIGN MINISTER—Mme. Bonnet, wife of the French Ambassador, and organizer of the French Embassy Christmas bazaar, admires the blue and gold Sevres vase which was sent by France's foreign minister, Robert Schuman, especially for the event. Another Sevres vase, on the table, was sent by the President of the French Republic, Vincent Auriol. On the table are a number of medals which were also sent by Mr. Schuman. These medals were made at the mint in France to commemorate such historic occasions as United States participation in the first World War and the landing in Normandy, in June 1944

Santa Arriving Early With Goods From Overseas

French Embassy Bazaar to Aid U. N. in Korea

By Dorothea Cruger

SANTA CLAUS HAS BEEN an early visitor to at least one Washington address his year. For weeks now Santa, or Pere Noel as he would be hailed there, has been calling at the French Embassy with the regularity of a mail truck.

The parcels bulging from Santa's pack bear labels from all the great French manufacturers. Small ones, stamped Lanvin and Griffe are unmistakably perfume. Others, crate-size, couldn't be anything but bottles of champagne or Bordeaux. And still others of varying shapes contain everything from fur stoles to toy poodles.

Ever since Pere Noel began his premature calls, Mme. Bonnet, wife of the French Ambassador, and other embassy ladies have been unwrapping, checking, listing and arranging this fabulous array. For every single item will be on sale at the gala Christmas bazaar to be held November 29.

The embassy's Yule bazaar has become an established event in Washington, with the proceeds in past years going to American Aid to France. This year, however, Mme. Bonnet has chosen to donate the funds to the American Red Cross in Korea, for the benefit of United Nations camp and hospital facilities.

On the day of the fete the whole first floor of the embassy on Kalorama road will assume the air of a Parisian "boutique" or specialty shop, like those found on the Champs Elysees or the Faubourg St. Honore. At little tables draped in silk will be displayed the best in French merchandise, some still in their original and highly individual store wrappings, ready for Christmas giving, as is the French custom.

At the perfume booth a giant flacon of essence by Dior, known as "Diorama" will be sold, along with the luxuriant scents of Lanvin, Fath and Lelong and others. Scarves of dazzling fabrics and colors, some to be worn as blouses, will occupy another table, while elsewhere will be sold laces and lengths of silk from the city of Lyon, jewels from Cartier and Van Cleef and Arpels, gloves and all the other "frivolities" or accessories so necessary to the chic of any woman, whatever her nationality.

For men, there will be ties bearing such well-known labels as Bianchini and Piguet. And in a children's corner will be dolls in native costumes, and the "Babar" books which have long been the staple reading matter of French tots—and of many American children as well.

WINE CELLAR—Mme. de Margerie, wife of the French counselor, checks the huge supply of champagne, Bordeaux and other wines which have arrived from the great wine centers of France for the French Embassy Christmas bazaar

WHILE a good part of the items to be sold were donated and shipped directly to Mme. Bonnet by leading merchants in France, some of the gifts came from French importers in New York and San Francisco, with the latter to be sold at a "California Stand." And still other articles are being knit and sewn right here in Washington by the embassy ladies themselves, from French designs. There will be, for example, the scarf-blouses faithfully reproduced in silk, satin and lame, from an original Dior model. And there will also be bed jackets in two shades of satin, lacy knitted baby clothes and satin comforters, all copied from French styles.

Delicacies, such as truffes, marrons glaces and berlingots will have their place, as will cases of Bordeaux wines, of such celebrated vintages as Chateau Haut-Brion and Chateau Lafitte, champagnes, chartreuse and cognacs. There will be an entire table of lingerie from Princess Obolensky's in New York, donated by Princess Boncompagni. And outstanding among the gifts will be the Sevres vases sent for the occasion by both President Auriol and Foreign Minister Schuman.

MR. SCHUMAN also sent 28 commemorative medals, struck at the French mint, which will be sold the day of the bazaar. These bronze medals celebrate both great historical figures and events. There is, for instance, a medal honoring Gen. George Patton, another honoring George Washington and a third the late President Roosevelt. United States entry into the First World War and the landing of American troops at Normandy in June, 1944, also are portrayed on these medals.

The honorary committee for the event is headed by Mrs. Truman, who is expected to attend, and includes Mme. Auriol, wife of the French President; Mrs. Allen Barkley, Mrs. Fred M. Vinson, Mrs. Dean Acheson and Mrs. George C. Marshall. Wives of high-ranking U. S. Government officials are serving as patronesses, and many of them will preside at the various booths. The bazaar will be open from 10 a. m. to 7 p. m. The public is invited.

TRES CHIC—FOR THE BEACH—These sunglasses with braided rims by Jacques Fath are "dernier cri" for summer wear. They are modeled here by Comtesse de Boisgelin, wife of the French Embassy secretary, who will preside at a booth selling "frivolities" or accessories at the French Christmas bazaar

MISS SALLY ALEXANDER, debutante daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Samuel Alexander, with Paul Porter and Mrs. Porter, stop to greet Mrs. George M. Scott (right) who came from Baltimore for the Thanksgiving Ball. Miss Mary-Stuart Price, Mrs. Scott's niece, was chairman of the ball

THANKSGIVING DAY traditionally opens the Washington debutante season, but this year something new was added to the holiday festivity—a debutante cotillion.

Carrying armfuls of red roses and wearing the usual bouffant white gowns, the buds were honored at the first debutante cotillion in Washington in quite a few seasons. Miss Mary-Stuart Montague Price was the chairman of the event which was held in the main ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel.

It was the night for the autumn and Christmas debs to shine, but there, also, were the debutantes of last season, wearing black, as well as some buds who will be presented in June. Supper was served at midnight, rounding out a full turkey day for the dancing debs.

Furs Come First, Say The Ladies

By Evelyn Hayes

FLATTERY and furs are two commodities of which no woman ever has enough. Some might gag on too many compliments—but there's hardly a female over the age of consent who would say she had too many furs. Ask any woman what she would like as the supergift for Christmas, if there were no bars on price, and chances are she'd say "Furs!" every time.

We asked six women (scientifically chosen because they happened to pass our desk!) and their answers ran true to form. Most of them wanted small furs—that is, jackets, capelets, stoles—showing a nice regard for the hypothetical giver's pocketbook. A quotable conferee said, "Furs, of course, because even a small piece of good fur gives you a feeling of luxury that nothing else can."

THIS YEAR, when elegance is the key to dress-up fashions, a gift of fur is an especially good choice because furs are the key to elegance. What the fur offering will be depends on the purse of the giver and the personality of the recipient.

For the average woman these days mink is the No. 1 dream. It may be a single skin necklet such as one with an attached costume pin attractively gift-boxed at Earlebacher's for under $40—or it may be a fabulous coat—or one of the in-between mink pieces pictured—but whatever the shape she wants mink because mink means elegance to her.

ON THE other hand, for a woman with a flair for fashion, the dream may be fox—the newest fashion on the horizon. At this fall's fashion events in New York such as the opening of the Metropolitan Opera and the Horse Show, the fur fashions that set cameras clicking were the foxes because they're news.

The fashion-wise woman knows that fox was in the 1920s and 30s what mink has been to the last decade and that it may be staging a fashion comeback. That's why she might relish a Christmas present of fox. She'd hate to be caught short on her fashion.

Fund Names New Director

Mrs. William Hodson has been appointed director of the Washington office of the Carrier Chapman Catt Memorial Fund, Inc., it has been announced. She succeeds Mrs. Winfield Heinz of Lorton, va., who has been in charge of the office since its establishment in January of this year.

The fund was established by the League of Women Voters of the United States in 1947 for research and educational purposes. The Washington office, located at 726 Jackson pl. nw., cooperates with Government agencies and civic and religious organizations in planning programs for foreign visitors. Arrangements are made for visitors to confer with leaders in their fields of interest and to observe procedures which will help them understand the ways in which citizens of the United States take part in government.

Mrs. Hodson came to Washington in 1943 and on the establishment of UNRRA in 1944 joined its recruiting section. Her work included an overseas liaison assignment with UNRRA offices and other international organizations. She has been a member of the board of directors of the League of Women Voters of New York City, where her late husband was New York City Commissioner of Welfare.

Miss Meehan Becomes Bride

THE MARRIAGE of Miss Rosamond Meehan, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Charles M. Meehan of Washington and Venice, Italy, to Carroll W. Hayes, son of Judge and Mrs. Carroll Hayes of New York and Spring Lake, N. J., took place yesterday morning in the Lady Chapel of St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York.

The ceremony was performed by the Very Rev. Msgr. William T. Greene, who was also the celebrant of the nuptial mass.

Escorted by her father, who was formerly with the State Department, the bride wore an ivory satin gown with an heirloom veil of Venetian lace and carried a bouquet of white orchids and bouvardia.

Miss Mary Carroll Hayes, sister of the bridegroom, was maid of honor. Joseph J. Gordon was best man, and the ushers were Eric P. Klinken and Joseph P. McCann of New York.

MRS. HAYES studied at the Marco Polo School in Venice and the Convent of the Sacred Heart and graduated from Manhattanville College. Her mother is the former Lina Bevilacqua Lazise, Countess of Nogarole.

Duchess Coming Minus Duke

By Marie McNair

BRIGHTENING the Washington scene next weekend will be the Duchess of Windsor, the Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney's and a dozen other prominent New Yorkers who'll be here for The Dancing Class at the Sulgrave Club Saturday night.

DUCHESS OF WINDSOR

The Duchess, who arrived Tuesday on the Queen Elizabeth—the same ship that brought Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gardner home from Europe—will be their guest during her brief stay here. Also in the Gardners' house-party will be John Heminway (he's the son of the famous Dolly Dorelis) and Edward McIlvain, also of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Hamilton will be here, guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Auchincloss; the Northam Griggs, who lived here during the war, will be back from New York to stay with Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Carusi, and Mr. and Mrs. Tinsley Garnett will be hosts to Sunny and Eleanor Whitney.

MR. AND MRS. Whitney will give a luncheon on Sunday at the Chevy Chase Club and among dinner parties which will precede The Dancing Class are those of Senator and Mrs. J. William Fulbright, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gardner and Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Cox.

The weekend for the Duchess and the Whitneys will really get started Friday night in New York at the Knickerbocker Ball for the benefit of the Sister Kenny Foundation. The Duchess of Windsor will return to New York from Washington to await the arrival of the Duke who stayed behind in England to put the finishing touches to his book.

THE JUNIOR LEAGUE which has been helping others for so many years, has put out its own cry of "help." After almost 15 years in its clubhouse at 2001 Massachusetts ave., the league is forced to move—unable to meet the increased rent.

Already "Outgrown," the league's busy and successful second-hand clothing store, has found new quarters at 1612 20th st., just a block from the clubhouse. They'll move in February. With the departure of "Outgrown," which helped to support the Department of Psychiatry at Children's Hospital, the burden of maintaining new headquarters will fall on the Junior League membership.

What the league would like would be three offices, a large meeting room, workshop space and a kitchen. It must, of course, comply with zoning and fire regulations. Any suggestions?

NOTE-BOOK NEWS:

THE SLENDER gold and emerald chain with matching earrings that Mme. Corea, wife of the Ceylon Ambassador, wears with her glittering gold brocade saris, isn't Ceylonese handcraft. It came from the costume jewelry counter of a Washington shop but nobody will believe it—least of all Mme. Corea's friends back in Ceylon when she visited her native home recently.

THE MIDSHIPMEN will whoop-it-up after the Army-Navy game next Saturday at the Brigade Cotillion to be held at the Broadway Hotel in Philadelphia. There'll be about 500 girls from Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Wilmington and New York to serve as hostesses at the dance which will begin at 6 p. m. and last until 12.

The blue and gold of the Navy will band the white frocks of the girls and members of the hostess committee will wear wristlets of blue and yellow flowers. The hop committee will be distinguished by aigrettes in their hair.

Alexandria YWCA Sponsoring Musicale

The Alexandria YWCA musicale to be held today at 4 p. m., will be given by Doris Vance Harmon, graduate of the College of Fine and Applied Arts, University of Illinois.

Now living in Arlington and married to Maj. Gen. Reginald C. Harmon, judge advocate general of the United States Air Force, music is an avocation with Mrs. Harmon. Her hobby is collecting bells.

For Sunday's program, in addition to displaying the small ornamental bells in her collection, she will explain how bells have been bound up with human life at every age. Being particularly interested in their influence upon music and composers, she will play several piano numbers, including "Au Conven," by Bordin; "Troika en Traineaux," by Tschaikowsky; "La Vallee des cloches," by Ravel,

If Shoulders Sag, You Will Look Older

By Ann Lawrence

(Third Day of Ruth's Beauty Program)

A TRIM, SLIM FIGURE is a youthful figure. But no matter how firm the muscles, the general effect you create upon the public is going to be determined by your posture.

If your chin slumps or juts forward, if your shoulders sag, if your back seems to slouch, the over-all impression is one of fatigue

Ruth, therefore, added two posture exercises to her daily chart. The first goes this way: Standing erect, with both hands grasping a waist-high bar, Ruth keeps her body in a slim, straight line, at the same time arching her back forward as far as she can. She then returns to the original, erect position, and repeats the exercise 10 times.

THE SECOND POSTURE-IMPROVER is called the posture sway: Stand 4 inches away from the wall. Pull the abdomen in so that the small of your back touches the wall. Press pelvis forward, so that the base of your spine is away from the wall. Holding the "lithe line" taut, raise your arms above your head. Keeping this position, bend your body to the right, then to the left, keeping arms and body close to the wall. Repeat five to 10 times.

Or, if you prefer to take your exercises lying down, try this one on your bedroom floor: Lie on the floor, arms over your head, with the lithe-line held taut. Bend your knees and turn them out, keeping your heels together and on the floor. Now pull in your abdomen so that the small of your back touches the floor and press your pelvis forward so that the base of the spine is off the floor. In this position, slide your heels forward along the floor until your knees are almost straight. Repeat five times and gradually work up to 10.

TOMORROW: Exercise To Firm the Breasts.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Young Divorcee Is Fond of Bachelor Who Conceals His Age, Which She Thinks Is Between 40 and 60; His Attentions Are Baffling, Too; Why Is This?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been going with Eldon for the past eight months. He is a bachelor, holds a good job and lives with his mother. He has stopped having birthdays, it seems; but judging by his appearance, he might be anywhere between 40 and 60 years of age.

As for myself, I am a divorcee, 29, and have one child. I am very fond of Eldon but he is giving me a hard time. We enjoy each other's company and also enjoy the same type of recreation, but periodically, about every six weeks, Eldon confuses me by stating that I should go out with some nice chap, fall in love and marry again.

Later, however, he always contradicts himself by saying that if I ever do go out with anyone else, he won't see me again. Twice we have stopped dating, parting in a spirit of friendship; but he returned after each "goodbye."

Eldon doesn't have any close friends and often says, "The more I see of people the better I like dogs." Can you understand why he likes me so well for a period of time, then turns against me, regularly? I don't know whether to give up hope, or to persevere in seeing him. What do you advise?

F. C.

DEAR F. C.: Where have you been these last 10 years, that you haven't picked up a smattering of academic or hearsay knowledge of the "Mom's Boy," enough to recognize the type, if by chance you get to know one in real life? Eldon is just such a fellow—the bachelor son who is perennially ineligible for marriage, due to his unweaned dependency upon his mother, a form of enslavement unconsciously contrived by her, as a form of insurance against being alone.

This aborted type of man has been under exploratory discussion in news columns, magazine articles, textbooks, short stories, novels, also in classrooms and living rooms, since the start of the 1940s.

Phillip Wylie's caustic brilliant handling of the subject from the layman's angle first ushered it into the category of "must read" literature. Then at the close of World War II, a specialist's book entered the lists. Dr. Edward A. Strecker, of the department of psychiatry of the University of Pennsylvania, authored "Their Mothers' Sons" (Lippincott, publisher), which furnished fresh insights into the neurotic relationship of "moms" to their evergreen "boys."

Shortly before Dr. Strecker's book was brought out, a condensation of his observations—based on his war-time medical work with young men—appeared in The Saturday Evening Post and evoked uproarious interest from the audience, as this office can testify. About a week after the article appeared, this column made reply to a letter asking help with an in-law problem, —in a sad situation obviously caused by a "mom" who was acting the jealous rival to her son's wife. In summing up, we referred the persons in conflict to Dr. Strecker's article, as a source of understanding that might lead to correction of their difficulties.

FOR WEEKS THEREAFTER, a steady stream of requests for clippings of the article poured in, interspersed with much angry mail from "moms" who had read the piece and disagreed with every word of it! All of which is to say that I had supposed an identifying description of "Mom's Boys," —who all run to type,—had penetrated the general consciousness of the Western Hemisphere by now. And that's why I ask, where have you been, that you don't know the meaning of Eldon's "yes-no-maybe" coquetry at an age that is roughly between 40 and 60.

Poor Eldon is a frustrated soul; and association with less inhibited individuals merely accelerates his unconscious conflicts. That's why he says, or feels, that the more he sees of people the better he likes dogs. His problem is what to do with himself, but he hasn't faced it. You can't do anything for him; and if your major social aim is to marry again, you are losing ground in giving time to Eldon.

If you resolutely throw him out, and adamantly refuse to unbend, he might in distraction offer marriage to bribe his way back. But even so, it wouldn't work, unless his personality had been revised and reinforced throughout, to prepare him for adult teamwork on intimate terms. And I gather he's rather too old to submit to that.

Parties Grow and Grow

Cocktail Hours Lengthening

By Elizabeth Maguire

THE BIG PUSHES in Washington come at sunset and continue through the cocktail hours. Military personnel has increased and parties have multiplied accordingly. A one time, cocktail hours meant 5 to 7, or 6 to 8, but now the hours are lengthening into late supper parties and dinners. The day may come when you will be invited for cocktails and find yourself at a ball.

A hit party of the week was the cocktail buffet dinner party given Wednesday by the Director of Intelligence, Maj. Gen. Charles P. Cabell of the Air Force, and Mrs. Cabell for the Air Force Chief of Staff and Mrs. Hoyt Vandenberg. Choir singers composed of sergeants in the Air Force brought down the house with a program of old favorites. Veterans of parties all over the world stated it was one of the best organized evenings of entertainment they had seen.

Mrs. Vandenberg

A NEW NAME has been added. Air Commodore and Mrs. J. L. Findlay of the New Zealand Embassy gave a cocktail party last Wednesday which they called a "whistle stop" party. All their guests dropped in for a few minutes apologizing because they had to get on shortly to two or three more parties.

It's not unusual to find a general able to command armies in the thick of battle without blinking an eye, who will retreat in utter confusion on the Washington party front.

Col. J. A. de Vos, Air and Military Attache at the South African Embassy, said he had had a wonderful week of parties, one after the other. Asked "whose parties?" he couldn't remember the name of a single host or hostess. There had been too many.

MOST DASHING uniform about these days is worn by the Chief of the British Military Staff, General Sir Neil Ritchie. It's navy blue, almost black, with scarlet stripes down the side of the trousers, scarlet epaulets and a great variety of medals. The medals didn't come with the uniform but they add considerable color.

Gen. Ritchie

Air Vice Marshal R. L. R. Atcherley, commander in chief of the Royal Pakistan Air Force, for whom the Ambassador of Pakistan and Mme. Ispahani entertained last Thursday is a twin, and both he and twin David Atcherley are famed as R.A.F. stunt flyers.

A PAKISTANI now heads the Army of Pakistan but the navy and air force still have British heads, a carry-over from before their independence.

Mme. Ispahani

From Fort Worth, Tex., comes news of the engagement of Miss Latane Worsham to Maj. Gen. Roger M. Ramey, Air Force director of Plans and Operations. Miss Worsham is the daughter of T. P. Worsham of Fort Worth. The wedding will take place December 27 in Shelbyville, Tex., Methodist Church.

Miss Worsham and Gen. Ramey met four years ago while he was stationed at Carswell Air Force Base here as commanding general of the Eighth Air Force.

WOMEN OFFICERS at Army Medical Center who recently received promotions held a promotion party Friday, from 5 to 7, at Delano Hall. All duty officer personnel working at the center attended. Thirteen women were promoted to major, and 34 to captain.

The Coast Artillery Association held a dance Friday evening at the Army Navy Country Club. It was their annual party, held at Thanksgiving time a week before the Army-Navy game.

Those attending the dance included Maj. Gen. and Mrs. William E. Shedd of Bradenton, Fla., Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Sanderford Jarmon, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Eugene M. Foster, Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Arthur Evans, Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Stanley R. Mickelsen, Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Cortland V. Schuyler, and Brig. Gen. and Mrs. William S. Lawton of Fort Monroe, Va., and Hampton Roads, Va. Col. Charles Harris was in charge of arrangements.

VICE ADMIRAL Paul F. Foster, who is with the World Bank, recently purchased Sugar Loaf Farm, an historic estate in Washington County. The property was bought from Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Lee. It is about five miles southeast of Frederick, Md., and includes a stone mansion built 170 years ago by Roger Johnson, youngest brother of Maryland's first elected governor, Thomas Johnson.

Engineer wives of the West Point Wives of '42 Club entertained other wives of the group at a luncheon at McKenzie Hall at Fort Belvoir on Wednesday. Mrs. Jerrold D. Snow, Mrs. Lawrence W. Vogel and Mrs. Miles L. Wachendorf were hostesses. Election of officers was held after the luncheon. Mrs. George D. Hughes succeeded Mrs. William C. Plott as president and Mrs. George C. Hozier took over the duties of secretary treasurer formerly held by Mrs. Paul B. Woodward.

THE MONTHLY luncheon of the Chemical Corps Ladies was held recently at the Kenwood Country Club. Mrs. John Boyd and Mrs. Wayne Fort were hostesses. Guest speaker at the luncheon was Lieut. Col. Ralph Curtin, former aid to General Pershing.

The next luncheon of the corps ladies will be held December 12 at Soldiers, Sailors, Marines and Airmen's Club. Hostesses will be Mrs. Ralph Benner and Mrs. W. J. Allen. For additional information call Mrs. Carl Grant at GLebe 1523.

Theme of Coming Art Show

"A Peace Movement Starts With Children"

"IN HEARTS too young for enmity there lies the hope to make men free."

Some place, Mrs. Frederick W. Muller, jr., heard the phrase. She didn't remember where but she sensed the underlying truth in the words. With it as a basis, she helped to found a movement which has traveled the world over. Washington will see the result of it Monday.

Mrs. Muller was thinking about world peace a few years ago when she recalled the words "In hearts too young . . ." That was it! A peace movement should start with the children!

The group of women who were working with Mrs. Muller in the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom chose art as the "universal language." So, Art for World Friendship was born.

THE ART IDEA is simple and uncluttered. Children would be asked to draw pictures of themselves in their familiar surroundings. These pictures were to be sent to the committee's headquarters in Media, Penna., and from there redistributed to other children all over the world. From this, children could see how much alike they are.

The women compiled a list of "contacts" from their own personal resources. Some women had friends in foreign lands, others supplied names from CARE packages. All these contacts were asked to present the "rules" to the nearest school where the greatest number of children between the ages of 6 and 14 could be reached.

The rules were few: Draw yourself in your own surroundings showing yourself in typical acts such as playing in the yard, going to school, or working around your home. Use any kind of art supplies you have, just so they don't smear.

THE IDEA caught on. The first year, over 1000 pictures were received at headquarters and today, three years later, the number has been tripled.

Washington will have the opportunity to see some of these international pictures on Monday when the Art for World Friendship premiere is held at the International Student House, 1825 R st. nw. The premiere will be held from 3 to 6 p. m. on Monday and the showings will be open for two weeks.

What does this art idea prove?

In a manner stronger than words, children are finding out how much alike they are. A little German girl drew a picture of herself tending a baby with the caption, "Sometimes I sit with the neighbor's baby."

FROM VIENNA came a drawing of a little boy washing dishes as he longingly watched through the window the other children playing in the yard.

THE WASHINGTON exhibition will include a group from 22 countries and the United States. Grownups will wonder, as they view the pictures, why an idea as simple as the Art for World Friendship wasn't put into operation before.

"In hearts too young for enmity, there lies the hope . . ."

MAKING DOLLS and cutting out colored papers is the caption of this drawing sent from Yasuko Ueno, 12 years old, in Tokyo, Japan. American children are always amazed how closely their clothes resemble the Japanese children's dress

This drawing is from a school child in India showing an Indian couple. The pictures sent in to the Art for Friendship Committee's headquarters are redistributed to the participating school children

Christmas Card Season Starts Early For Reader Who's Been Saving a Batch

EVERYBODY ELSE MAY BE doing Christmas shopping early, but we're doing our "post-Christmas" shopping—for worthwhile organizations that can use second-hand Yule cards. The idea was stimulated by the following letter:

DEAR ANNE:

Would you be so kind as to publish the address of the orphanage or whatever it was that wants old Christmas cards? Having just moved here from North Carolina, I have literally hundreds of such cards and refused to just throw them away because I remembered reading in your column where to send them.

Dorothy D. Hershey,
110 Lynnwood, Alexandria, Va.

Your question is timely, Mrs. Hershey, with Christmas just around the corner. Earlier in the year, we mentioned the following mission school that welcomes cards: Cumberland Mountain Mission House, Fort Blackmore, Scott County, Va.

Readers, if you know of other places that would like to have old greeting cards for constructive purposes, will you write this column? I'd like to get some suggestions so we'll be all set for the post-Christmas season.

DEAR ANNE:

In reply to Mrs. J. A. Jepson's request for a recipe for Irish soda bread, I enclose my mother's recipe which we all have enjoyed for years. We use baking powder and sweet milk, in place of soda and sour milk, but it is just as good.

Mrs. Bradley, New Alexandria, Va.

IRISH SODA BREAD
(Made with baking powder)

4 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 tablespoon sugar
1 cup raisins
1 teaspoon salt
2 cups milk

Mix dry ingredients together, including raisins, then gradually add milk. Don't let dough be too stiff. Roll to desired shape on floured board and place in greased pan. Bake in moderate oven for one hour. When brown, remove and rub with butter. Roll in towel until used.

Alwilda Ferris Bride In St. Matthew's Rite

THE MARRIAGE OF Miss Alwilda Jarden Ferris, daughter of Capt. Floyd Franklin Ferris, USN, and Mrs. Ferris, to Ross A. de Matteo 2d of Washington, son of Mr. and Mrs. James de Matteo of Providence, R. I., took place yesterday afternoon in St. Matthew's Cathedral.

The Rev. William J. Awalt performed the ceremony which was followed by a reception at the Admiral Club. The bride cut the wedding cake with her father's sword, which had been used for the same occasion at her parents' wedding.

Escorted to the altar by her father, the bride was attired in a gown of heavy ivory satin with a waist of Spanish lace, made with a high neckline, long sleeves and a train. Her mother's long tulle veil was attached to a cap of heirloom Brussels lace, fashioned to resemble a Normandy peasant's bonnet with orange blossoms on either side and scattered throughout the veil. Her bouquet was of white orchids and stephanotis.

Miss Mary Stuart Montague Price was her maid of honor. She wore a dress of titian red slipper satin with a pointed neckline to one side and elbow length pushup sleeves. The full circular skirt was shorter in front, with a suggestion of a train. She carried an arm bouquet of Brandywine roses.

The bridesmaids, Miss Rose de Matteo of Providence, R. I., sister of the bridegroom; Senorita Carlotta Pardini of Panamá, Mrs. E. Sheldon Potter of Alexandria, Miss Margaret Woodhouse, Mrs. Jacques Kelly and Mrs. Hugh Richardson of Washington, wore similar gowns of a lighter tone and carried cascading bouquets of Brandywine roses with headdresses of the same material as the dresses.

Mr. de Matteo's best man was Raymond de Matteo, his brother, and the ushers were E. Sheldon Potter of Alexandria, William Potter of Providence, William Arbuckle of Yonkers, N. Y., Richard Jenks of Providence, H. Wallace Capron of West Barrington and Lieut. (jg) Dean Kutchera, USN, Charles Brook, jr., Edmund Rowan and Paul Devine, all of Washington.

Mrs. de Matteo is a graduate of Holton Arms and Mr. de Matteo is an alumnus of Brown University.

Builder's Dwelling Has Separate Areas for Work, Play, Sleep

Three Levels Make Small Home Big

Features Fill Unusual House

By Robert P. Jordan

WHEN a builder sets about putting up a house for himself and his family, chances are he'll end up with something more than a little out of the ordinary.

Unlike most would-be home buyers, who must shop around for a house that approximates their needs at a price they can pay, the builder generally knows exactly what he wants and where he wants it and is in a position to make it a reality.

What such a house amounts to is a precise tailoring of needs to construction. That in itself is uncommon — custom-built homes being the exception. But some builders toss in an experiment here and there, as well, and come up with a truly individualistic home.

Consider the house that Harry A. Boswell, jr., 28, well known Prince Georges County builder and realtor, has constructed for his wife, infant daughter and himself at 3518 Oliver st., Hyattsville.

Boswell is a believer in the theory that various living functions should be allotted separate and distinct areas of a house. Too, he wanted his house to have certain features in it that, he felt, would go a long way toward making it a home.

BUT, BECAUSE his family is small, he didn't want a big house. So he built a house that looks from the front like a conventional, one-story dwelling—the small, bungalow-style home that is so popular these days. Its dimensions are only 36 by 28½ feet.

Inside, however, it's a different story. He's carried out his functionalism theory on three different levels. The result is a small house that contains the space of a much larger one. And it has features like these:

Fireplace in the kitchen . . . two full baths . . . an interior wall of Roman brick . . . two types of heating systems operating off a single boiler . . . concealed lighting at ceilings . . . a storage room that runs the length of the house . . . and picture windows that afford a fine view of farm-and-woodland.

The idea of setting aside distinct areas in a house for sleeping, living, playing, is not new. But it's seldom carried out, because it can be expensive. Boswell explains it this way:

"I wanted to put this concept of modern living into a house of more or less conventional appearance — and to do it more economically that with a rambler." The way he worked it out, he says, "is the only economical way of following the theory of separating different living functions."

Thus, when you enter the house from the front, you come in on the middle level—into a tastefully appointed living room 13½ by 19 feet in size. The living room, and the 11 by 11-foot den at its far end, are devoted to entertaining and working.

A LARGE FIREPLACE and built-in bookshelves lend the living room a note of informality. The den has a built-in desk, a studio couch which may be converted to a bed for guests, and bookshelves high against the wall. Here Boswell, who holds a law degree from Georgetown University and is taking a doctorate in economics at American University, does his studying.

A short stairway leads from the entertaining-work area to the third level, which contains two bedrooms and a bath between them.

Setting the bedrooms area away from the remainder of the house, Boswell says, will give his daughter a feeling of security. The child will sense that it is a rest area and sleep without distraction, the builder believes. A sundeck opens off the little girl's bedroom.

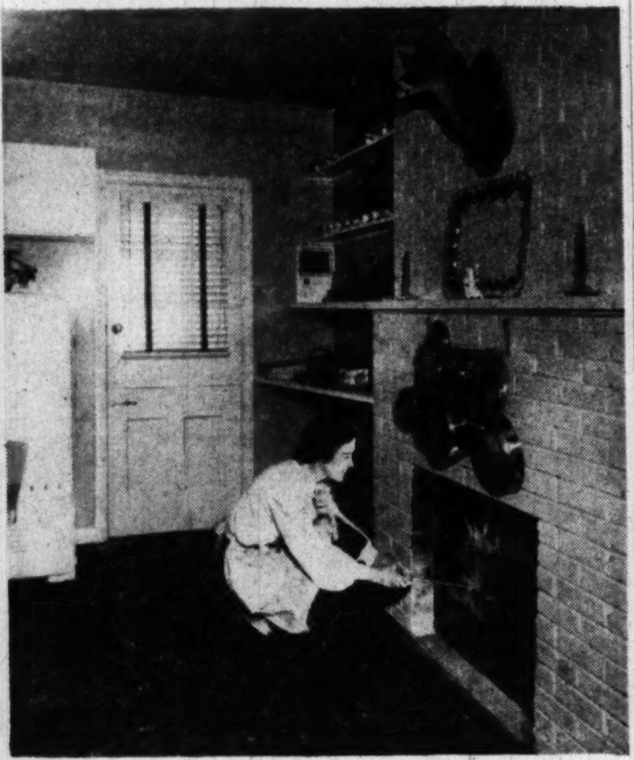
What Boswell terms the "family-living" area is on the house's lowest level, a few steps down from the living room. It consists of a general purpose room and the kitchen, each 13 by 14 feet in size. A bathroom separates the two rooms and is directly below the bathroom on the third—sleeping—area. This is an example of "plumbing on plumbing," a cost-saving factor in home building.

In the general purpose room, the builder has indulged a personal fancy. One of its walls is of Roman brick. An unusual feature in itself, Boswell has made it more so by using a larger amount of mortar than is common between the brick.

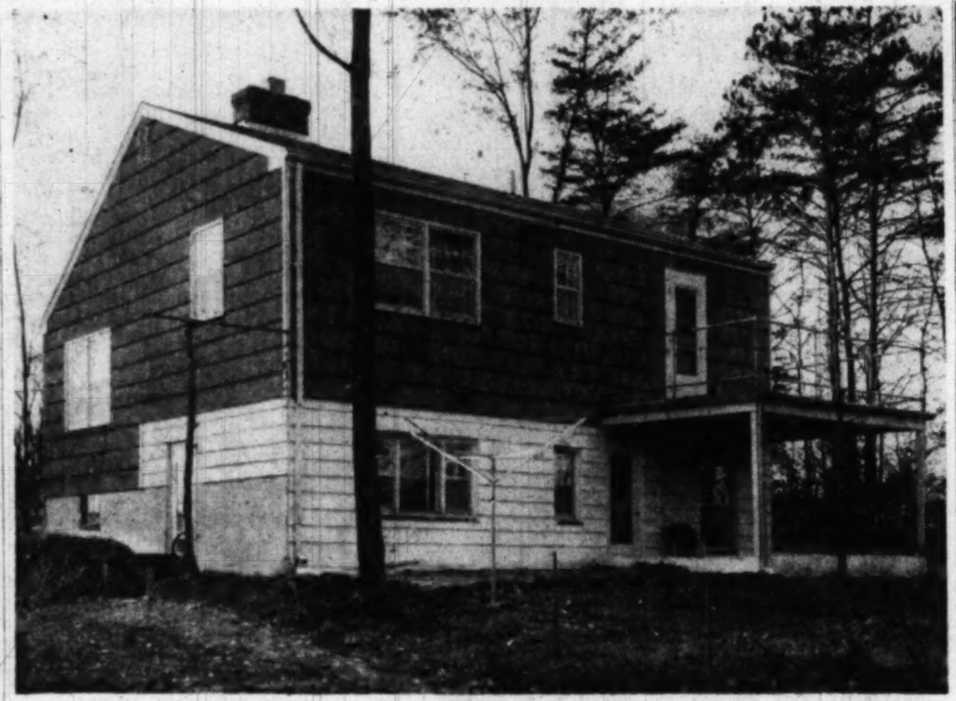
Since it's an interior wall, it's relatively warm, he points out. Generous use of mortar tones down the color of the brick but retains the horizontal line emphasis. It presents an interesting architectural effect. And a large

See HOUSE, Page 3, Column 2.

Looks like a conventional, one-story house, doesn't it? The home of builder Harry A. Boswell, jr., its sleeping, family living, and entertaining and work areas are constructed on three different levels—making for spaciousness and efficiency within its 36 by 28½-foot dimensions



A fireplace in the kitchen—something you seldom see in today's modern houses. Mrs. Boswell is proud of her gleaming kitchen, but it's the fireplace that sets it apart. It's more than just a charming feature: meals are often prepared there with a charcoal burner. French door at left is another of the kitchen's features



By Bob Burchette—The Washington Post.

Rear view of the house shows the tri-level living arrangement. Door at left and at the porch open into kitchen and general purpose room—both on the bottom level. Left front window designates the second level, on which the living and work rooms are placed. Door above the porch opens to bedrooms on the third flight

Survey Shows:

Short Supply Of Materials Is Ending

SHORTAGES of lumber and other building materials are rapidly disappearing over the country, according to H. R. Northup, executive vice president of the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association.

He said that a recent telegraphic survey of materials dealers showed that nearly all commonly used materials are now available for "reasonably prompt delivery" in retail yards. Inventories, according to Northrup, are increasing steadily.

The improvement in the supply situation is attributed to the downturn in new housing starts, better availability of freight cars, and the return to more normal buying practices in the trade, the lumber official said.

"While the supply of building materials containing strategic materials may become tight after the first of the year, as the supply of metals for civilian use is restricted to aid the rearmament program, other materials are expected to be in full supply in the months ahead."

Home Applications Plummet at VA

BUILDING of houses for Greater Washington veterans under current Federal mortgage credit restrictions apparently isn't going to amount to much in the months to come.

Since the credit controls took hold October 12, it was learned yesterday, requests for appraisals at the regional office of the Veterans Administration have dwindled to a trickle. The score:

Only one request for a committee appraisal has been made in the six weeks that the controls have been in effect—and this to cover only 19 houses. The regional office has received 17 individual appraisal requests on as many new houses, and 207 on old houses.

This is not to say that thousands of houses for veterans won't be built here next year. There will be. But they'll be built and sold under easy credit terms that were available up to October 12—because VA received applications for their construction before then.

Indications are, however, that the volume of houses built with VA loan guarantees under the credit curbs will be comparatively small after the easy credit backlog is worked out.

MORGAN B. CALLAHAN, loan guaranty officer of the regional office, released month-by-month appraisal statistics yesterday which point to this: enough houses can be constructed on a before-October-12 basis to keep area builders busy for months—but once they're built and sold, veteran home seekers may have to look long and hard.

The following table lists requests for appraisals received by the regional office from June through November 22. Committee requests are those of builders whose projects are large enough to warrant study by several appraisers.

Committee appraisals (in house units)	Individual appraisals New houses	Old houses
	JUNE
1755	73	686
1859	55	671
	AUGUST
1928	56	482
	SEPTEMBER
592	40	344
	OCTOBER (Through Oct. 12)
11,222 (nearly all on Oct. 11)	70	416
	NOVEMBER (From October 12 through November 22)
19	17	207

While appraisal requests have declined drastically since October 12, the number of veterans applying for GI loan guarantees is remaining at a high level. So far this month, 1200 have sought VA home loan assistance. In October, 1244 veterans applied for loan guarantees.

The regional office, Callahan reported, already has okayed 1500 loan guaranty applications this month—a new record. Many members of his staff have been working overtime to cut down the backlog, he said.

As has been the practice since last summer, phone calls and visits to the loan guaranty office are shut off between 8 a. m. and 1 p. m. in order to expedite the paper works.

To Callahan, the huge decrease in the amount of appraisal requests made since October 12 has not proved surprising.

"WE EXPECTED requests for appraisals on new construction to drop sharply," he said, "after being flooded with appraisal applications just before Regulation X went into effect." He pointed out that the deadline rush represented proposed construction that builders had been planning for some time.

"Under normal circumstances these requests would have come little by little, and extended over approximately six months," he said.

"There are indications that some builders will be constructing housing developments that will come under Regulation X. But builders are moving very cautiously in this direction. They want to get a better understanding of the regulation.

"They're trying to foresee its effect on prices and financing and on purchasers."

Permit Requested To Build 24 Homes

Opposes Continuance

Chamber of Commerce Calls Rent Controls Discriminatory

EXTENSION of rent control would single out owners of rental property as a special class for discrimination, the United States Chamber of Commerce has charged in opposing continuance of Federal rent control.

Opposition to continued rent ceilings was voted by the organization's board of directors. The President has asked Congress to continue rent control, which expires December 31, until next March 31.

The board's statement came after presentation of a report by its committee on construction and civic development. The committee, its report, said:

"THERE IS REASON to believe that rent control would be allowed to expire, as now contemplated in the statute, except for the propaganda effort which is being made to take advantage of the rearmament program to get it continued and strengthened.

"It would be a great injustice to owners of rental property, most of whom are small property owners, to separate them out for special and discriminatory treatment.

"Any need for rent control, certainly at the Federal level, has long since passed. The unprecedented volume of construction of new homes and of units created by conversion has eliminated any need which may have existed. The extent to which communities on their own initiative have divorced themselves from rent control, the decontrol actions initiated by the Housing Expeditor, are further evidence that the rent control law should not be extended."

Rent Controls Restored to Pa. Township

HOUSING EXPEDITER Tighe E. Woods has reestablished Federal rent control in East Buffalo township (Union County), Pa., on the basis of information received from the rent advisory board of Williamsport, Pa.

The board said that rent control, lifted December 20, 1949, should be reimposed because a shortage of rental housing existed in the township.

It was the ninth recontrol action by Woods on the basis of rent advisory board recommendations.

Five Bethesda Homes

Henry J. Connor, 7240 Wisconsin ave., Bethesda, has applied for a permit to construct five 1½-story, brick and cinderblock houses in the 9500 block of Nowell dr. and Bulls Run pkwy., Bethesda.

Loan League Convention Starts Today

THE FUTURE of home ownership will be the subject of a panel discussion highlighting the fifty-eighth annual convention of the United States Savings and Loan League here this week.

An executive committee meeting today will open the convention, which extends through Friday. An attendance of nearly 2500 persons is expected for the sessions.

Prospects for home ownership under current Federal mortgage credit controls will be the subject of an exchange of viewpoints by four men in the savings and loan business and three men outside of it next Thursday. This will follow an address by Charles T. Fisher, jr., head of the Federal Reserve System's office of real estate credit.

Members of the panel include Edward R. Carr, of Washington, past president of the National Association of Home Builders; Joseph C. Hazen, jr., executive editor of Architectural Forum, the Magazine of Building; Dr. Arthur M. Weimer, dean of Indiana University's school of business; and the following savings and loan company officials:

M. K. M. Murphy, Rutherford, N. J., past president of the loan league; A. D. Theobald, an official of the Peoples Federal Savings and Loan Association, Peoria, Ill.; E. J. Rupert, president of the Broadview Savings and Loan Company, Cleveland, Ohio; and T. T. Taylor, president of the Prudential Federal Savings and Loan of Salt Lake City.

Construction Declines, But Tops '49 Level

CONSTRUCTION contract awards in the Middle Atlantic States in October totaled $137,265,000—a decrease of 12 percent from the September total but 32 percent above October, 1949.

This was announced by J. T. Little, district manager of F. W. Dodge Corp., construction news and marketing specialists.

The 10-month construction contract award total for the area comprising eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and the District of $1,542,622,000 was 39 percent higher than the comparable total for 1949, he said.

Residential contracts at $60,077,000 were 22 percent below the September figure but 16 percent more than October, 1949. Nonresidential awards totaled $53,463,000, one percent above September and 50 percent higher than October last year.

For the 10-month period of this year as compared with the same period of 1949 the totals were: Nonresidential $467,780,000, up 26 percent; residential $756,453,000, up 69 percent; public and private works and utilities $318,389,000, an increase of 10 percent.

Product Previews

IT'S things like this that are brightening kitchens these days. Apart from the young lady, that is. She's displaying four pieces of the new "Nosegay" line manufactured by Nesco, Inc., of Milwaukee, Wis. The 19-piece set of kitchen accessories was styled by Designer Raymond Loewy in white, gray, yellow and black color combinations.

FASHION trends toward sheer and fragile hosiery make the advent of a snag-resistant spray for nylons of special interest. The material proved in tests to make hose 300 to 900 percent more snag-resistant, depending on the quality. One can will provide 70 sprayings. Hose should be treated after every three washings.

CONVENIENT shelf to hold telephone, directory and note pad is available in red, yellow, white, gray, green or brown. It stands on a table or fastens to the wall. There are many more uses to which the shelf can be put, such as a rack for cookbooks in the kitchen or a bottle shelf in the bathroom.

TWENTY uses are suggested for a new three-tiered table on wheels that will serve in every room from cellar to attic. Legs are of chrome-finished steel and shelves are of Masonite in a choice of six colors. The rack folds for storing.

HOUSEHOLD cleaning pad for all tasks from dishes to woodwork is a cellulose sponge with a pocket that holds a cake of cleaner. The cleansing agent suds in hot or cold, hard or soft water.

RADIANT heating is creating a good deal of interest these days and is now available from one company in several forms. There are large rectangular units for permanent wall installation, portable or permanent models with a dial temperature control and baseboard panels for permanent installation. The unusual infrared rays come through electrically heated unbreakable glass, heating objects and people in a room instead of the air.

SWEATER, sock and glove drying frames of steel have nonfading Vinylite coating that prevents rust. The wire can be pulled into the desired shape and size without breaking. The thumb of the glove dryers crosses the palm, following glove design.

WASHABLE plastic spray for interior and exterior surfaces can be had in any color, light or dark, and provides a flat, semiluster or gloss finish that will withstand weather, lipstick, crayon, ink and all the miscellaneous smudges that mar walls. As with all plastic compounds, a knowledge of chemical reactions is necessary and for this reason, the company releases this material only to the hands of trained workers. However, the ease and speed of application reduce labor costs.

SANITARY cap for milk bottles is made of polyethylene and fits over the outside of the bottle. The inner ridge makes the cap airtight and there is a small lip for lifting. The cap enables one to use milk bottles for juices and drinking water in the refrigerator.

'Dry Wall' Construction

"Dry wall" construction is a comparatively new term. It is a way to finish interior walls with dry materials, such as gypsum boards, soft-boards, hard-boards, and plywood—the opposite of "wet-wall construction," or plaster.

Advantages claimed for dry wall construction are that it is less expensive, constructed faster, that it does not crack, and does not crumble when nails are driven into it.

NAHB Hopes For 16,000 at Winter Meet

THE NATION'S home builders are expected to turn out in record numbers for the forthcoming annual convention and exposition of the National Association of Home Builders in Chicago.

The event, normally scheduled each February, has been moved up to January 21-25. It will be held in the Stevens and Congress Hotels.

Frank W. Cortright, executive vice president of the NAHB, reports interest in the convention is at an all-time high. An attendance of more than 16,000 builders, architects, materials manufacturers and others in the industry is expected, he said.

Problems introduced by the Korean crisis and the expanding war economy and controls will occupy an important part in panel and clinic discussions. These sessions, many with audience-participation, will include technical, financial, merchandising, production, house design, public relations and other subjects of importance to home owners.

Winners of at least four national contests, including home design, sales campaigns, neighborhood development and National Home Week newspaper sections will receive awards during the show. Winning entries will be on display.

Thomas P. Coogan, of Miami, NAHB president, will make the opening address on January 21. He will discuss the general outlook for 1951 and review the progress made by the building profession in 1950.

Other discussions will cover these subjects: "Stretching the Supply of Building Materials in 1951," "Proper Role of Government in American Housing in 1951," "Better Design for Today's Houses," and "Public Relations and Merchandising in 1951."

A highlight of the convention will be speeches by Raymond M. Foley, Housing and Home Finance Administrator Franklin D. Richards, FHA Commissioner, and T. B. King, director of Loan Guaranty Services, Veterans' Administration.

Maple Flooring Producers Report Increased Output

BOOKINGS of northern hard maple, beech and birch flooring in the first nine months of 1950 amounted to 63,800,000 feet, an increase of 80 percent over the same period last year. This was reported by L. M. Clady, secretary-treasurer of the Maple Flooring Manufacturers Association. Clady said shipments this year, to date, totaled 49,825,000 feet, up 37 percent from 1949.

These figures were reported by both member and nonmember manufacturers, who produce approximately 95 percent of all northern hard maple used in the United States, he said.

D. C. Real Estate Activities

Calvin K. Snyder, director of the Realtor's Washington Committee, will be guest speaker at a meeting of the brokers' group of the Washington Real Estate Board at 12:30 p. m. Wednesday at the Burlington Hotel.

SNYDER

Snyder will discuss the present legislative system affecting real estate operations and cover highlights of the recent convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards in Miami Beach. The meeting is open to all members of the Washington Real Estate Board.

Speaking of the NAREB convention, more than 35 District realtors, headed by J. Garrett Beitzell, president of the Washington board, attended the sessions.

BEITZELL

Beitzell gave NAREB a formal invitation to hold its 1952 convention here. Invitations also were extended by the Los Angeles and Houston boards.

During the convention, Charles C. Koones was elected to a three-year term on NAREB's board of directors, and H. Clifford Bangs was elected a member of the organization's national nominating committee. Another Washingtonian, Robert T. Highfield, became a member of the governing council of the Institute of Real Estate Management.

Frank Calcara, chairman of the home show committee of the Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington, yesterday announced members of his committee and promised a whiz-bang of a production March 31 through April 8.

CALCARA

Tentative plans for the fifth annual home show include the "Parade from Mars"—a display of 1951 products so new they've never been seen, Calcara reported.

Pleased with the whipping that public housing issues took in the November elections, the National Association of Home Builders, in a press release, has announced it will ask Congress to postpone for the emergency period all construction of new units under the public housing program.

Public housing was defeated in Kenosha and Madison, Wisc., and in California.

Gen. John J. O'Brien, president of Gunnison Homes, Inc., says that the 50,000 prefabricated houses that will be turned out this year is the most that the country's prefab manufacturers can produce under present facilities.

He reports that his company and others in the industry have had a "phenomenal increase in sales of anywhere from 200 to 800 percent during the past 18 months."

20-Unit Apartment Building Slated

Construction of a 20-unit apartment building will begin soon in Silver Hill, Md., by M. Pomponio & Sons, 2228 Wilson blvd., Arlington.

Plans have been completed and zoning approved. Owner is the Willart Corp., in care of the builder. The architect is Frank Martinelli, 1104 19th st. nw. Sub-bids will be taken shortly.

NAHB Roster Increases, New Chapters Formed

SO FAR this year, a total of 2419 builders have joined the National Association of Home Builders, Frank W. Cortright, NAHB executive vice president, reported yesterday.

In addition, he said, home builder groups have been formed in 20 localities since the first of the year. Seven other communities are now in the process of forming chapters.

He reported that NAHB now has 17,915 members in 146 local affiliated associations.

Government Buys Big N. Y. Building

NEW YORK.—The Federal Public Building Service has completed negotiations for the purchase, at an approximate price of two million dollars, of a 20-story office building at 15-19 E. 26th st. for use by the State Department to house Voice of America.

According to reports, the State Department, under which the "Voice" operates, will install 36 studios in the building and expand its force to about 2500 employes, to enlarge its broadcasting program from 30 to 54 hours daily by the end of next June.

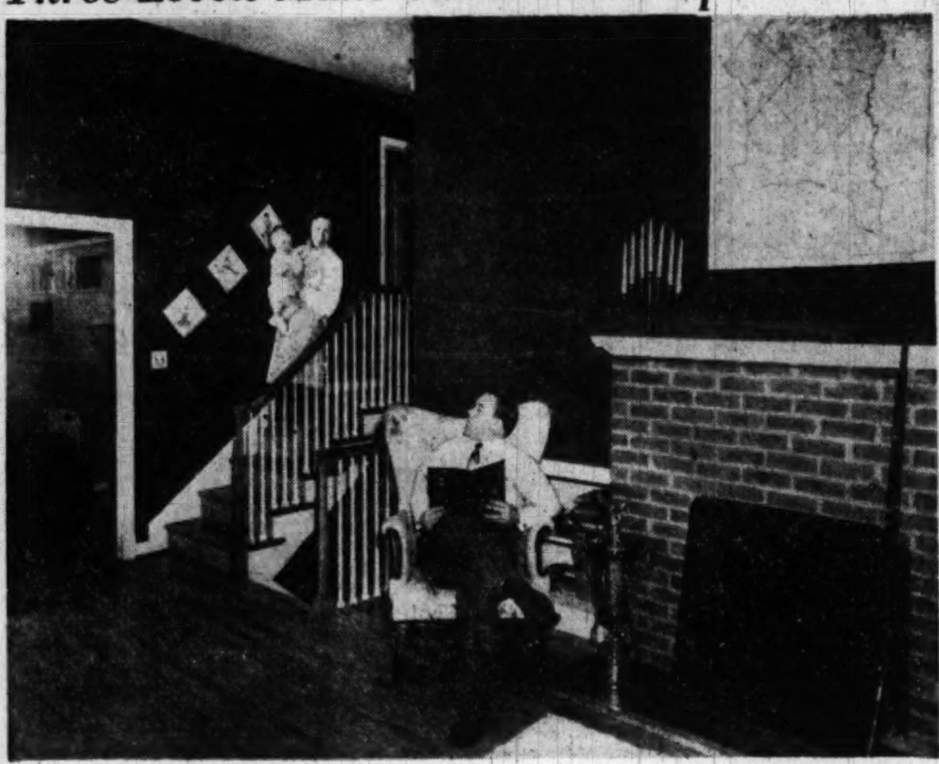
Three Levels Make Small House Spacious



For Boswell, seated, it's but a few steps to his work room-den at the far end of the living room. Mrs. Boswell is descending the stairs with their infant daughter, Sandra, from the third-level sleeping area. Stairs continue down to bottom level family living area picture window serves as a balance. This room opens onto a porch.

In the kitchen, Boswell has built a large fireplace that is directly beneath the second-level living room fireplace. Thus, one chimney serves both. To the left of the kitchen fireplace is a French door leading outside. To the right is a door leading into a storage room which extends across the front of the house.

He has employed radiant panel heating for the house's bottom level because, he says, "I felt that the heat ought to be in the slab."

The second and third levels, however, are warmed by convector baseboard heating.

"It was something I wanted to try," he explains, "and it works very well. It gives warm walls and doesn't take up too much space."

Each heating system has a separate pump, relief valves, controls. One large boiler supplies both systems.

Boswell bult the house "to meet our needs" and to be as livable as possible. If he had it to do over, he says, "I wouldn't change it a bit."

Home's a Healthier Place

Winter Air Conditioning Warms Those Cold Floors

INSTALLATION of winter air conditioning can result in more healthful living conditions. This system provides even warmth throughout the home, eliminates cold floors, and sends clean, filtered air into every room.

Most gravity warm-air furnaces, whether oil, gas or coal, can be converted to a winter air conditioning system by installing a furnace blower filter unit. Attached to the present furnace and consisting of a small electric motor, blower fan and air filter, it assures constant uniform heat and air free from dust, dirt and pollens.

The blower unit forces warm air into all rooms of the house—even those farthest from the furnace. This forced circulation means an even warmth—no cold drafty corners or floors which are often the starting points for many winter colds.

The clean, dust-free air is a result of the filters enclosed in the blower unit. These filters remove dust, dirt, lint and pollen from the air drawn from the cold air intakes and ducts. This purified air is then returned to the heat bonnet of the furnace and from there into the warm-air passages leading to the rooms.

When the filtered air reaches the rooms, 85 percent of all air-borne particles have been removed and the occupants breathe air that is almost completely free from household dust, the major cause of many allergies. This filtered air may also help to prevent that dreaded winter ailment, the common cold.

Winter air conditioning is economical. The forced circulation of air produced by the blower fans means more heat from the same amount of fuel.

According to the Furnace Blower Manufacturers' Association, this system may also be used to provide ventilation during the humid summer months.

On Building a Better Atom Bomb Shelter

By Lawrence N. Eldred

CHICAGO, Nov. 25.—How to save business records in case of atom bombing is attracting more attention from researchers and architects these days.

Most interest appears directed toward concrete as the best building material for atomic defense. Projects at the Portland Cement Association's new three-million-dollar laboratory and at the Armour Research Foundation have evolved tests for pressures up to a million pounds. Methods for making concrete stronger have been developed as part of these research programs.

As for design, H. G. Miller, jr., of the American Photocopy Equipment Co., has planned an atomic bombproof underground vault, to be constructed largely of concrete.

His interest springs from the company's business of microfilming and duplicating business records.

"SAVING those records is a crucial problem," Miller said. "Some 40 percent of firms which lose their records in fire or flood are unable to continue in business. This would be just as true or more so in case of bombing.

"But we feel just placing copies of the records in a bank vault would hardly be enough in wartime. Banks are centrally located, just as the businesses are, and their vaults too may be destroyed in an attack.

"What we have in mind is a building set out in open country where bombing would offer an enemy no strategic purpose. Yet the location should be close enough to the city so records still would be easily accessible to the business district for expanding or revising. Companies could rent vault space in the building as they would a food locker."

As Miller envisions such a vault it would be underground, four stories deep, and built in sections connected by runways, with elevators connecting the floors. Rooms would be lined with tamper-proof storage drawers. Sections could be added to the building as needed. Emergency exits could be built in too.

All that would appear above ground would be an inconspicuous entrance unit. Farms or homes would remain as usual on the surface.

He chose concrete as the construction material for the building.

This selection was backed up by A. Allan Bates, the cement lab's research and development vice president.

"Reinforced concrete structures, properly designed, possess a unique combination of impenetrability to deadly atomic radiation, resistance to blast destruction, and safety against fire," Bates declared.

HUBERT WOODS, director of research at the laboratory, explained that concrete acts as a shield against atomic rays, and also has great strength against the pressure or shock waves connected with an atomic bombing.

Strength tests of concrete are made in compression testing machines in the lab, one of which exerts up to one million pounds of pressure. More than 30 laboratories and control rooms are housed in the new research center, Bates said.

Yet, though concrete is recommended as strong enough for general defense against atomic attack, work at the Armour Research Foundation is directed toward making concrete still stronger. This kind is called "prestressed" concrete.

William T. Savage, supervisor of mateials engineering at Armour, said such concrete had proved to be more rigid and more resistant to strains which would come from atom bombing. At the same time it is cheaper to produce and about 30 percent lighter ir weight than the ordinary reinforced variety, he said.

Walls, roofs, or floors can be built of this material. The concrete is molded in blocks and 20 or more blocks strung on threaded steel rods. The blocks are compressed by nuts which are tightened on each end of the steel rods by special wrenches.

This places the blocks under compression and the reinforcing bars under tension, Savage explained, adding that the two actions working against each other markedly strengthen the whole.

Completed sections are hoisted into position by a crane, then are welded together in place by a concrete binder, the whole area being covered by 1½ inches of poured concrete to form the finished surface.

General Bids Sought

C. D. Murphy and Lyle L. E. Jones, 2389 25th st. se., are seeking general bids on construction of a five-unit apartment house at 1506 White pl. se. Architect is George T. Santmyers, 2209 L st. nw.

Floors Serve Different Functions

FROM a functional standpoint, different parts of a house call for different types of floor surfaces.

In the living room and dining rooms, a handsome wood floor is often used, or flooring that is only a base for wall-to-wall carpeting.

Entrance halls require a hard-wearing, easily cleaned floor to withstand traffic from outdoors. For kitchen flooring, practicality is the key.

Kitchen floors should be easy to keep clean and sanitary; resilient; resistant to burns, spillage and other damage.

In bedrooms, floors should give quiet and warmth. Bathroom floors should be easy to clean; warm and safe underfoot.

Says Architect:

Sun Will Drop in Every Day —If You Plan It That Way

THE SUN can make your house a sunnier place—if you plan it that way. It doesn't matter much whether the lot you build on faces north, south, east or west.

A study just published in Technical Bulletin No. 15 of the Housing and Home Finance Agency presents sketch plans showing how to make the most desirable use of sunlight and at the same time achieve maximum quiet, privacy, charm and efficient room arrangement.

"Many houses are being designed today which meet specific room-size requirements but do not satisfy the requirement of livability from the owner's point of view," says Bernard Wagner, architect and the article's author. He offers four model plans which overcome this defect.

Each of the four plans is for a two-bedroom house tailored to a 50 by 100 foot lot. No matter which direction the lots face, all four have their living rooms facing south, or nearly south, to obtain maximum warmth and cheer from the sun in winter.

In all instances, east or southeast orientation of bedrooms was chosen "to take advantage of the sun's light on winter mornings and avoid the strong heat of the afternoon in summer, thus keeping the rooms cool for sleeping."

Any point of the compass that a lot faces presents its particular livability problems. The four plans present solutions to some of these problems. Modest lot size intensifies planning difficulties, and calls for variation in design to fit each situation. In Plan "A," for example, the lot faces south:

FOR PROPER SUNLIGHT, the living room must face the street. Two features of the design help overcome this handicap: 1. A dining alcove adjoining the living room opens onto a garden at the rear of the house. In effect, this creates a living area extending from front to real, with a garden view. 2. At the front, the living room opens onto a terrace which is screened from the street by a fence and shrubs. Proper orientation of the bedrooms for sunlight places them satisfactorily at the rear of the house, where it is quiet.

In plan "B"—lot faces north:

This lot presents fewer problems, because the best orientation of the house for sunlight is also the best for compactness and pleasant relationship between indoors and outdoors. A southern exposure for the living room places it at the rear, opening onto the terrace and overlooking the lawn beyond. The bedrooms are at the rear and east side, for quiet and correct light.

Plans "C" and "D" present further variations of the same size house, adjusting the plan to fit lots facing east and west, respectively. Because of the small lots in all the plans, the study focuses on livability problems for small homes, but design principles involved apply also to larger dwellings on larger sites.

In addition, the study shows the slight variation required to avoid monotony. "Setbacks and projections create small intimate spaces in the form of garden forecourts or patios which make a street attractive . . . Variations in roof line and color, as well as different landscaping schemes, are further media to avoid monotony."

Technical Bulletin No. 15 is available from the Superintendent of Documents, United States Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., at 20 cents a copy.

The House That Two Blind Men Built

Laurel Shugars, 44, foreground, needed a house to live in. Clarence Meyers, 50, his friend, helped him build it. Both are blind, but the house, nearly finished now, is a good one—and a source of inspiration to neighbors in Kalamazoo, Mich., who watched them construct it

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Nov. 25. The house on Francis st. in Kalamazoo is just a bungalow. It has a living room that doubles as a kitchen, a bedroom, a bath and a work room.

It is a good, plain house, but the house on Francis st. is also a monument, if you can use such a fancy word to describe such a simple strucutre.

It is a monument to the two men who built it, because both men are blind.

On October 1 Laurel Shugars, 44, and Clarence Meyers, 50, set to work to build the house. Neither of them could see what they were doing. Shugars has been blind for 14½ years. Meyers has been blind for three years. Shugars needed a house to live in and Meyers was his friend.

Today Shugars is living in the dwelling. It is not yet completed, but its roof is tight and the walls are strong. The worst of the job is over and only the tedious inside trim work remains.

The persons who have seen these men feel their way through the job say that it is a source of inspiration.

"WHEN YOU WATCH those fellows," said Linue Cox, a neighbor, "you just want to help them. It makes you ashamed of griping about your own troubles."

"They worked as fast as a real carpenter and a helper," said the manager of the lumber company that supplied them material. "We actually got behind in sending out their lumber and they had to wait for us. I just couldn't believe it."

How could they do it?

To begin with, Shugars was a skilled machinist and millwright before an accident blinded him in 1936. Meyer had worked as a carpenter before a brain tumor cost him his sight in 1947. Work has been scarce for both men since.

"I know machinery," said Shugars, "but I just couldn't have begun this job without Clarence and his knowledge of carpentry. He has worked hours on end and never once has he mentioned money. That's real friendship because when you're blind, money is hard to get."

The job began October 1 on a lot next to Meyers' house. A friend squared out the house lines on dimensions drawn by Shugars. Then the two blind friends dug the foundation, following a string placed to guide them.

They supervised the pouring of the concrete and troweled and smoothed the floor. Lumber was stacked so they could tell where each size could be reached. Using regular saws, squares and measuring rules, they cut the 2 by 4 plates and studs.

To insure a square cut, they made nail scratches across boards using the square as a guide. Then they followed the scratches with their fingernails while sawing across the boards.

They hammered nails with accuracy, sheathing the house with more skill than most seeing men, put on windows and doors and clambered along the rafters to roof the dwelling.

They were preparing to put on shingles when good neighbor Cox arrived with a crew of friends and did the job in two hours.

Except for this, Shugars and Meyers need help only on raising the studding and cutting the angles for the roof rafters. They were helped in these tasks by Meyers' wife and Cox. By themselves, the blind men drove a 20-foot well and are installing plumbing, a stove and a chimney.

When the time comes, Shugars will wire his home and put in wall sockets for his power saw and other tools but, he reminded a caller, "I have no need of electric lights."

Electric Power Industry Expands $14 Billion Worth

By Richard Fiske

THE NATION'S electric power producers are stepping up an already fast-moving expansion program to insure ample electricity for defense and civilian needs—come what will.

The Korean war and the needs of a continuing defense economy even after hostilities are ended, sparked the decision to speed up installation of new generating capacity.

A postwar 9-billion-dollar expansion—described by private power leaders as the largest ever undertaken by a single industry—became a 14-billion-dollar program overnight.

Facilities that were scheduled for 1952 will be brought on the lines next year. Orders for generating equipment that were planned for two or three years hence are being placed now with the big equipment manufacturers.

Private power men voluntarily began revising expansion plans upward immediately after the Korean war began. They started them rolling despite increasing construction costs.

Power men explained the importance of power to all industry was so great that construction costs became a pretty minor factor. Such basic industries as steel and automobile production, for instance, are limited to a great extent to the power available to turn their wheels.

There is no doubt in the minds of leaders in the private power industry that they will be able to meet any demand that's made upon them. But neither do they underestimate their tasks.

The task of keeping the supply of electricity ahead of the demand is not new to the industry.

IMMEDIATELY after the war a terrific demand for electric power build up overnight. It was mostly in the residential field but it was nonetheless pressing.

The nine-billion-dollar expansion program was started to keep generating capacity ahead of the demands of customers and at the same time to leave a comfortable reserve margin for any emergency.

It was nip and tuck to carry out this double-barrelled program. But this year the industry finally achieved its goal—a margin of 15-percent reserve.

The industry no sooner had the opportunity of catching its breath momentarily than the Korean war brought the potential demand that resulted in the decision to speed up expansion.

This time it was industry that called for more and more power.

The program of expansion already under way, and not due to be completed until the end of 1951, provided a cushion from which to start the acceleration plans.

Recently L. V. Sutton, president of the Carolina Power & Light Co., reported his industry in better shape to meet the current defense emergency than when the Nation began to get ready for World War II.

Sutton made his report to W. Stuart Symington, chairman of the National Security Resources Board. He spoke as head of the Edison Electric Institute, trade association of the private power industry.

There will be plenty of power to meet the needs of the country, Sutton said—provided "no Government limitations are imposed which would prevent the completion of the construction program now under way."

He told Symington that by the end of this year the electric industry will have a total generating capacity of 71 million kilowatts—nearly double what it had at the beginning of 1941.

He added the utility construction program underway would add another 14 million kilowatts of generating capacity by the end of 1952.

And, Sutton said, 30 million kilowatts of the industry's generating equipment is less than 10 years old, with all the advantages of economy of operation and relative freedom from mechanical breakdown.

Since Sutton made his report to Symington, company after company in the private power industry has voluntarily stepped up its expansion plans.

In every section of the country private power began revising its construction schedules as power requirements increased because of the preparedness program.

Design Contest Set for Students Of Architecture

ARCHITECTURAL students are eligible to compete for prizes in two national design contests announced by the Beaux-Arts Institute of Design, New York, in cooperation with the Tile Council of America.

One problem calls for design of a 350-unit garden-type apartment project. Permanence of construction using fireproof materials is stressed. The second contest requires a sketch plan for a public swimming pool.

The contests close December 23. Judging is set for the second week in January. Additional information about the competition, which offers prizes totaling $325, is obtainable from Catholic University's architecture department.

Design Does It

Here's What Makes Small Houses Tick

THE SMALL HOUSE is in big demand today. One reason is the large number of new families that have been formed since the war's end. Another is that it falls within the financial reach of such families.

To keep the cost at a minimum architects have contrived numerous space-saving ideas and put them into the small house.

For instance, partitions between rooms are often eliminated, or smaller ones used. A two-inch saving on each side of a partition may seem trivial, but the average small house has 66 feet of partition walls, and two inches saved on each side adds up to 22 square feet.

Here are other space and money saving design steps:

By opening the front door into a small vestibule, or directly into the living room, the hallway is eliminated. By placing windows carefully, greater wall space to accommodate furniture groupings is achieved.

A single large picture-window requires less wall space than several small windows, and also creates an effect of spaciousness in a small room.

Storage cabinets divide dining-area from living room, and a storage wall separates kitchen from dining area. This arrangement throws three rooms together into a single large open space, rather than three cramped ones.

INTELLIGENT use of color also gives rooms a look of greater space. Color values are kept light to impart cheer and to avoid an oppressive sense of crowding. Pastels on walls and matching wodwork is the first step toward this end.

Using a single color throughout a room for walls, draperies and furniture slipovers is a device of interior designers to keep the small room uncluttered.

Another space-saver is the smaller-sized heating unit and the reduced size of radiators; or the elimination of radiators and use of warm-air grilles in walls; or hot-water coils embedded in the concrete floor, or steam baseboard radiators which circulate steam or hot water.

Kitchens are compact. Their wall cupboards often extend to the ceiling, with shelves placed at various levels so that bulky articles can be stored alongside of low stacks of dishes. Revolving shelves are placed in cabinets where they join at a corner. Cupboard doors slide instead of swinging out.

Two Missouri Counties Renew Rent Controls

HOUSING EXPEDITER Tighe E. Woods has reestablished rent control in Laclede and Pulaski Counties, Mo.—areas adjacent to Fort Leonard Wood. The action was taken on the basis of findings by the local rent advisory board that "great and excessive" rent increases had taken place in the vicinity of the fort. The area had been decontrolled in September, 1949.

The Laclede-Pulaski rent advisory board resolution, in calling for the reestablishment of controls, stated that reactivation of Fort Leonard Wood had created a great present housing shortage.

Woods explained that the expansion of military personnel at Fort Leonard Woods from a skeleton force to over 35,000 servicemen had created a serious rental housing shortage in areas near the fort.

Make It Cheery

Entrance Hall's a Home's 'Handshake' With Visitors

THE ENTRANCE HALL is your home's "handshake" with visitors. If it's bright and cheerful, the hall will create a favorable impression and put guests at ease. If it is dingy or down at the heels, well——

Secrets of making an entrance hall a success are lighting, floors, decor and furniture. If these elements are right, even the muddiest rubbers, the wettest umbrellas and the heaviest traffic won't mar the hall's attractiveness for long.

Guests don't like to be greeted in a dimly lighted tunnel, so step up the brightness of your hall. Fluorescent lighting, hidden behind a cornice so that it strikes the ceiling, will give a pleasant effect. A lamp on a table can greatly increase a hall's brightness, and often larger light bulbs are enough to do the job.

Snow, mud, dust and water are all tracked into the entrance hall, so that it needs a rugged floor. One of the most satisfactory materials for it is clay tile, because it's waterproof and easily cleaned. Tile for floors is available in many colors, and its use will eliminate need for a hall rug.

The walls of the entrance hall should be tied into the colors of the next room. But a brighter paint or wallpaper can be used on them, since little time is spent there and the effect therefore won't be too strong.

Heat in the hall will be appreciated by winter guests. Radiant heating under floors is a development that's proving practical.

If the entrance hall is large, take advantage of the space to build in shelves for books or knickknacks.

Suburban Apt. Project Has City Comforts

NEARING COMPLETION in Collingswood, N. J., is an apartment house development which may help to raise standards for future projects aimed at providing urban comforts in country-like surroundings.

Located on an 18½-acre site, the project features a commercial development in its center built over a 500-car underground garage.

The shopping center, which includes a medical dispensary and restaurant, is reached without leaving the apartment area by ramps leading from one wing of each building.

Each of the four multi-story apartment buildings has its own indoor children's playrooms and recreation rooms, an automatic laundry in the basement, and incinerator chutes on each floor for waste disposal. The buildings emphasize the use of glass for external walls.

Plumbing and heating lines are located within the interior core of the buildings, helping reduce initial costs and maintenance costs. Each structure has five fire escapes, one for each wing and one in the center.

Rentals range from $75 for "efficiencies" to $110 for three-bedroom terrace apartments.

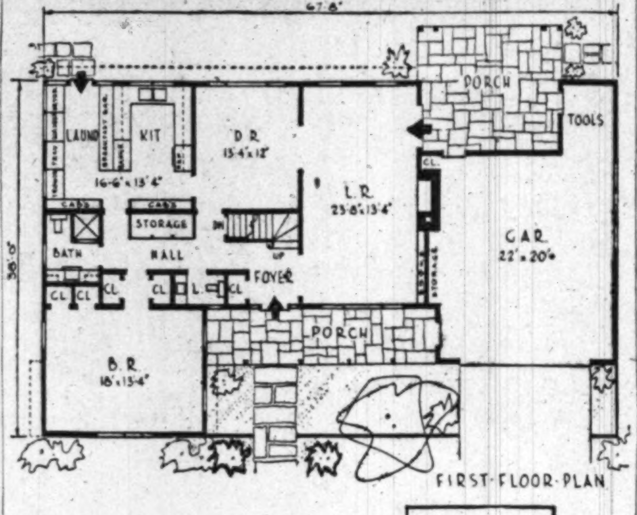
Martell Company Makes Low Bid on Federal Building

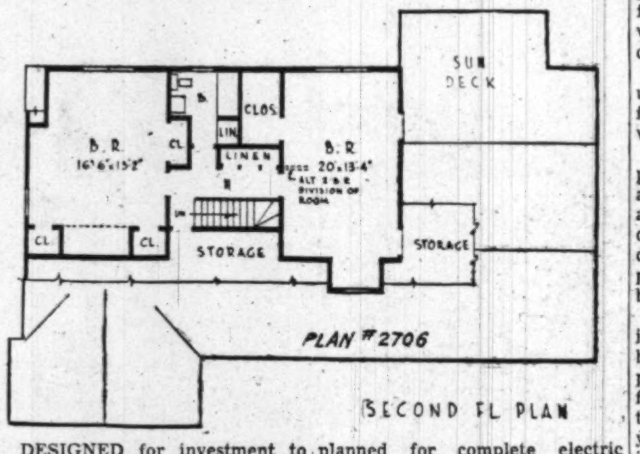
F. H. Martell Co., Inc., has submitted low bid of $2,883,000 for construction of a shop, laundry and storage building for the National Institute of Health in Bethesda.

The building is to be four stories in height. Dimensions will be 460 by 138 feet. It will be built of brick and limestone.

Award for construction is expected to be made soon, according to a General Services Administration spokesman.

This One's an Investment





DESIGNED for investment to meet higher cash payments required under modern credit restrictions, this house incorporates many luxury features.

Rooms are large and efficiently arranged for convenient circulation and cross-ventilation. A combination kitchen-laundry is planned for complete electric equipment.

There are two baths, powder room lavatory, full basement, 12 closets and two-car garage.

This is plan 2706 by Rudolph A. Matern, 90-04 161st st., Jamaica 2, N. Y. It covers 1297 square feet without garage and porches.

The Livable Home Calls For Planning

A FEW PRINCIPLES followed when you buy a home site and begin construction can make a lot of difference in the comfort your house will afford, both in summer and winter. They are:

Choose a south or southeast slope. Avoid a north slope. Stay out of valley bottoms.

Block north winds with a windbreak. Let southerly breezes through, however.

Build the roof to project over the sides of your house, the way the brim of a man's hat shades his face.

Put in plenty of windows on the south side of the house. Install windows throughout the house at different levels to aid the flow of air.

Install insulation to keep heat and cold from leaking through walls and ceiling. And select a quick-acting heating plant.

Convectors Make Good Radiator Replacements

IF ONE of your home decorating problems is trying to disguise old-fashioned radiators, it might be worthwhile to investigate the new convectors.

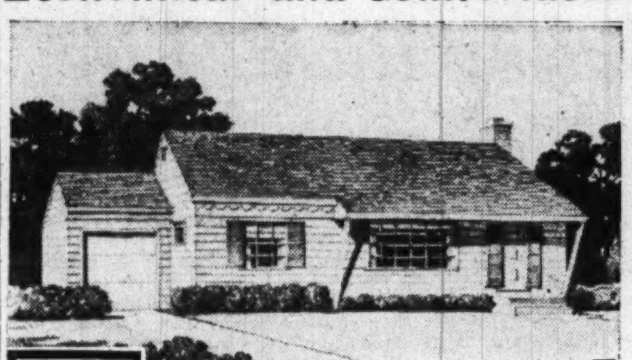
These slim, attractive heating units are excellent replacements for radiators on any steam or hot water heating system.

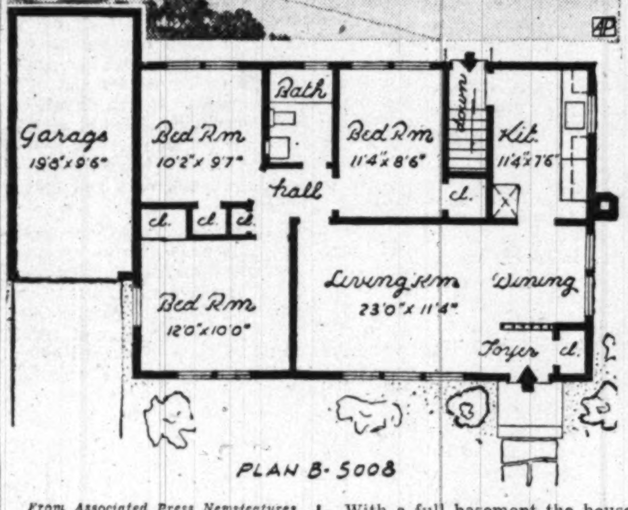
Convectors are easy and inexpensive to install, and they provide an economical form of heat. They are streamlined and compact in design, and will blend into any decorative scheme. Delivered in a prime coat, convectors easily can be painted any color.

If you prefer to make your heating units as unobtrusive as possible, convectors will fit into your plans nicely, for they can be placed flush with the wall or recessed into the wall. Recessing is advised if you are building a new home, but if you are just replacing older units such as cast iron radiators, convectors still will give you several extra inches of floor space.

The open-end mortgage can be used to pay cost of new roof, garage, modernizing kitchen, painting, new heating plant.

Economical—and Comfortable





From Associated Press Newsfeatures

CONSTRUCTION economy and comfortable living are featured in this perfectly rectangular plan. Although the house has three bedrooms it covers an area of only 852 square feet exclusive of garage.

With a full basement the house has a content of 17,040 cubic feet. The house measures 36 by 23 feet, 8 inches. The garage, 10 by 20, adds about 2400 cubic feet.

This is Plan B-5008 by Alwin Cassens, jr., 116-55 Queens blvd., Forest Hills, N. Y.

Papeete Tries Slum Clearance

PAPEETE, Tahiti (AP)—This capital of the Society Islands has embarked on a slum clearance project. It may sound strange to westerners who imagine the south seas isles as sparsely-populated areas studded with swaying palms, but Papeete has become congested.

Polynesians from the outer islands have crowded in to get jobs and provide their children with educational benefits of the metropolis. A little over a mile from the center of old Papeete, the French colonial government is erecting a settlement of small but well-constructed homes for Polynesians. They will have modern sanitation and low rentals.

'Sponge Cake' Concrete Cuts Costs

A "sponge cake" concrete has been developed which may solve some of the problems in lowering construction costs, according to the Housing and Home Finance Agency. This concrete is much lighter than the ordinary mixture. It can be put to uses for which heavy concrete is not suitable. The lightweight character of the material comes from air bubbles which replace the aggregate used in concrete.

Slum Removed With Private Financing

Construction is under way in Memphis, Tenn., of 88 apartments being built on the site of the first slum clearance project in the country wholly financed through private funds, reports the Housing and Home Finance Agency. The apartments, located in 18 two-story frame buildings, are for Negro families. Rentals will be under $40 a month.

272-Unit Project Of Semidetached Houses Scheduled

PLANS are nearly completed for a development of 272 semidetached houses to be built in Seat Pleasant, Md.

Owner is Moreland Gardens, Inc., (Raymond G. Clark, 3745 McKinley st. nw.). Architect is Arthur E. Allen, 3523 Fordham rd. nw.

The dwellings are to be two stories in height, with basement, and 20 by 25 feet in size. General bids will be asked soon.

Space Under Eaves Needn't Be Wasted

With a few tricks in arrangement, space under eaves of the roof can often be converted into an attractive bedroom or study. The bowling-alley look can be eliminated by hanging a ceiling over the central portion and a series of closets.

Floor space can be saved with built-in furniture. Curved walls under the sloping roof, mirrors and large-scale design in the wallpaper also provide an illusion of depth and spaciousness.

20-Room Motel To Be Built

Preliminary plans are being drawn for construction of a 20-room motel, restaurant and gas station on the Washington-Baltimore blvd. near Beltsville. The one and two-story structure will be 280 by 40 feet. Owner is Hines Engineering Co., 2340 Columbia Pike, Arlington.

13-Unit Apartment Building Slated

Permit application has been made for construction of a 13-unit apartment house at 1000 st. ne. Owner is Joseph Berger, 3742 12th st. ne.

The building will be three stories in height, with basement, and of brick and cinderblock. Dimensions are 70 by 37 feet. Architect is Marcus Hallett, 6525 Piney Branch rd. nw. Selected builder will be announced shortly.

12 Homes to Be Built in NE D. C.

Waggaman & Brawner Realty Corp., 1700 I st. nw., plans to construct 12 two-story and basement houses in the 5700 blocks of 2d and 3d sts. and Chillum pl. ne.

VFW Considers Survey to Find Effects of Curbs

TO FIND the effect of recent credit restrictions placed on veteran homes, the Veterans of Foreign Wars is considering a Nationwide survey which would be conducted by the organization's 10,000 posts.

This proposal will be considered by the V. F. W. national housing committee and will be put into action if the committee approves.

Omar B. Ketchum, national legislative director of the V. F. W., said that the proposed survey will help to determine whether these restrictions are too drastic. "We hope that through our on-the-scene contacts with veterans . . . throughout the country we can get a first hand, frank, revealing reaction."

Plans for Office Building Near Completion

FINAL PLANS and specifications for the Perpetual Building Association's new office building at 12th and E sts. nw. are expected to be completed shortly.

Cost of the structure is estimated in the neighborhood of two million dollars. It will contain more than 100,000 square feet.

Complete construction details will be available soon. Builder is the Bank Building & Equipment Corp. of America, in care of Robert O. Scholz, 1614 K st. nw.

Nine Houses Proposed

Plans are in prograss for nine two-story and basement dwellings to be built in Wood Acres, Bethesda, by the Wood Acres Construction Corp., 6701 Hillandale rd., Bethesda. Sub-bids will be taken shortly. This is the first group of a 43-unit project.

5 Stores Planned In Wheaton, Md.

Five one-story stores are scheduled for construction at Georgia and Price aves., Wheaton, Md. Owner is B & G Corp., in care of the architect, J. Wilmer Smith, 808 17th st. nw.

Plans for the stores are expected to be ready in about two weeks. Selected builder is to be announced. To be of brick, cinderblock and limestone, the structure will be approximately 100 by 155 feet in size.

Modern Design Dresses Store

Just completed, the new Wales Decorators building at 1180 N. Highland st., Arlington, is an example of architectural skill and ingenuity. Note use of plate glass to highlight the structure's modernity. Rich colors dramatize the interior. The new store offers a wide range of home furnishings

Mandalay Wants to Rebuild Palace

RANGOON (AP)—Mandalay's citizens will ask Prime Minister Thakin Nu to permit rebuilding of King Midon's golden palace when the prime minister visits Mandalay this month, a government official said. Midon was the next-to-last of the Burmese kings. His 72-year-old palace was destroyed by Japanese bombs in 1942. The palace was of teakwood, heavily lacquered with gold.

Pioneer House Painting

The first paint made in Utah was for Brigham Young, records show. In the early 60's, the pioneer church leader had a 100-pound keg of lead pigment brought by ox team across the plains. Joseph Pitt crushed enough flaxseed to make the linseed oil necessary for making the paint which was applied to the residence the church head was building for himself.

Rent Controls Removed

Six communities were removed recently from Federal rent control by Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods following declarations by their local governing bodies that a shortage of rental housing no longer existed requiring rent control. The six are: Tulare, Calif.; Port Angeles and Orting, Wash.; Longmont, Colo.; Mayfield Heights, Ohio, and Belvidere, N. J.

Kremlin Is Remodeling Rural Life

By Tom Whitney

MOSCOW.—Apparently little noticed outside the Soviet Union, the USSR is in the midst of a vast agricultural revolution.

Government plans for agriculture and rural life now being put into effect are aimed at: (1) a vast increase in supply of foodstuffs and of raw materials for industry, and (2) radical transformation of all sides of rural life and economics.

This "revolution" has many aspects. It is impossible even to list them all in a short article, but here are some of the more important things which have been done or are being done in the Soviet countryside:

1. During this year, a movement has been carried out to merge small and very small collective bargaining farms into larger collective farms. In some districts around Moscow and Leningrad, the number of collective farms has been reduced by up to two thirds. It is said that the mergers pave the way for greater mechanization and organizational efficiency and a richer cultural and economic life for farm members.

2. Closely related is a longer-term movement to replace small, isolated villages on large collective farms with well-built rural cities with populations up to 10,000 and all the cultural and economic conveniences of modern urban life. Some of these cities are in an advanced stage of construction.

3. Along with the movement for more mechanized agriculture is a drive for use of the "brigade" system of labor organization on collective farms. The brigade is more adapted to machine agriculture.

4. Collective farmers are building their own local power stations, using water power when it is available. In some cases, farms are being hooked into urban circuits receiving their power from big plants. The rural electrification movement is aimed at providing every farm household and every collective farm with electricity in five or more years.

It is not just a matter of providing electric lights for homes, although this is important, but of electrification of all farm processes, even plowing. Experimental electrical tractors already are being used in certain areas.

5. Other projects are aimed at increasing soil productiyity and the efficiency of its use. For instance, the reforestation program is directed at providing a field-by-field defense against the dry winds of the south which cause drought some years in the most important grain areas. In addition to long shelter belts, millions of hectares of trees will be planted by individual farms. There is also a large-scale formation of tens of thousands of collective farm ponds.

6. As another phase of the reforestation and antierosion program, there is being introduced a crop rotation system worked out by Russian scientists in which perennial grasses are used to rebuild soils rapidly.

7. About two years ago a new plan was adopted which provided for vast increases in the livestock and poultry population. This plan required the establishment on every collective farm, with a few regional exceptions, of four livestock farms, one for poultry, one for horned cattle, one for pigs and one for sheep and goats. It was described as the first of several steps aimed at giving the Soviet Union the largest livestock population in the world and the largest production of meat, hides, wool, eggs and other livestock products.

One of the chief slogans of the Communist Party, repeated time and again by orators, newspapers and magazines, is the "abolition of the differences between rural life." This is to be done by increasing the productivity of rural labor, altering the type of rural settlements to make them into small cities and increasing the material and cultural facilities available to rural inhabitants.

Don't Let Them Wilt

Fuchsias Require Removal And a Prompt Repotting

By Alfred Putz

STARTING early in January, commercial growers of fuchsias remove the last year's plants from their winter quarters and shake all the old soil out of the roots before reporting promptly in a mixture of two parts good loam, four parts leafmold or peatmoss, two parts coarse and one part dried cow manure and half cupful bone meal for each bushel of complete mixture.

They give the plants a light watering and keep them between 60 and 65 degrees during the day and 50 degrees at night. These are the temperatures which should be maintained through all stages of growth so far as possible.

Keeping the plants moderately moist at all times is another important requirement. They never should be allowed to wilt nor should they be watered so heavily as to keep the soil in a prolonged soggy condition.

They soon will make new shoots and when these are about three inches long remove them with a sharp knife. After cutting off the lowest pair of leaves the cuttings are placed in moist, coarse sand for rooting in a closed propagating frame. The home gardener will find that a glass jar placed over them will be an efficient substitute for such a frame.

IF THE SPROUTS are allowed to grow a little longer, one or two pairs of leaves may be retained on the mother plant either to give more cuttings later or to prepare them for another flower display. The old plant will not be so attractive as those raised from cuttings, but is worth saving it for no other reason than to protect the owner against a complete loss in case anything should go wrong with the cuttings.

Keep the cuttings supplied with just enough water to prevent wilting. An excess is sure to cause rotting. Place them in a bright but sunless window and watch the temperature closely.

When they have become well rooted, as indicated by new growth, they are placed individually in four-inch pots filled with the same mixture used for the old plant except that the cow manure and bonemeal are omitted in the first potting.

Feeding will become essential just as soon as they get on their way. Weak liquid manure may be given every second week. Often but little, should be the rule. Commercial fertilizer, if preferred, is best applied in liquid form. Keep feeding regularly as long as they grow vigorously and are blooming well.

THEY ARE willing bloomers until the weather turns hot. What to do with them then is the crucial question. When they begin to show the effects of the heat give them a moderate pruning and sink the pot rims deep in a partly shaded garden spot where they are handy for watering. Still better would be a trench filled with peatmoss if it can be kept moist.

A cool porch also will serve if the pots are placed in jardinieres or boxes filled with wet moss. A deep surface mulch of peatmoss will further add to their comfort no matter where they are kept.

Above all, make sure they have enough moisture to prevent wilting but not so much as to drown them. Frequent springing of the foliage will help them now as much as at any other time during active growth.

WHEN NIGHT FROSTS threaten, take them up and prune moderately. Reduce the watering gradually to harden the tissues for their winter rest. During the winter they require very little moisture but must not become bone dry.

The ideal winter temperature is between 45 and 50 degrees. If it goes below no harm will be done but they should not be subjected to frost despite the fact that they can survive 25 degrees if not too prolonged.

Some gardeners winter them in a deep, tight, sash-covered cold-frame filled to the glass with straw or salt hay. When it gets very cold place on the glass an old blanket or several layers of burlap. Banking the sides of the frame wtih soil also adds to the protection. Keep them in storage until the latter part of the year then start all over again.

Controls Lifted

Federal rent control ended in five communities recently when Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods signed decontrol orders based on local resolutions declaring that a shortage of rental housing no longer existed. The five are: Beachwood, Ohio; Rockton, Ill.; Corvallis, Ore.; Kelso, Wash., and Yolo County, Calif. (unincorportated portions only).

Sub-Bids Taken

Joseph Light Construction Co., 1436 Kennedy st. nw., will build 28 one-story and basement houses on Braddock rd. and Cottrell ter., "Oakview," Silver Spring. The brick and cinderblock dwellings will be 41 by 26 feet each. Sub-bids are being taken.

Clean, straight lines, a careful blending of woods and very little hardware and marks of modern desks. Deep drawers for home files and shallow drawers for other needs help the home scribbler keep papers in order.

The Muscles That Floored Dempsey Now Floor Floors

By Loudon Kelly

DENVER.—Men who work with Ben Parrish on a house building job say he can take a "16" nail and with two blows of his hammer put it clean out of sight in the side wall studs.

Ben isn't one to deny it. He is quite matter-of-fact in feeling he is just as good a house builder as you'll find in these parts and that goes all the way from drawing the plans to hammering the final nail in the roof.

Parrish has the arms of a blacksmith and the chest of a dock loader, yet at 62 he is still a middleweight. Just as he was when he wrestled Jack Dempsey into exhaustion in half an hour and when he tussled with a brown bear—which outweighed him four to one—day after day for 20 weeks in a traveling carnival.

Parrish's almost-white hair doesn't fool anybody who has half an eye for quickness of movement and toughness of muscle. He still would be a rough one to handle in any sort of fight.

SWINGING his hammer happily, Ben can look back on a career as a farmer, foot racer, wrestler, manager and outfielder of a semi-pro baseball team, Federal reformatory guard, Boy Scout executive and machine gun instructor for the Air Force.

He says he took part in 631 wrestling matches — not counting those with the bear—and only twice was beaten in his own weight division. The match with Dempsey is a good story, as Ben tells it. This happened at Olathe, a little Western Colorado town, two or three years before Jack took the heavyweight boxing title away from Jess Willard in 1919.

"Jack had come to town for a fight; but the sheriff stopped it," Ben said. "Fights were then against the law in Colorado and it was close to election.

"Andy Malloy, who was managing Jack, came to me and said they needed help bad—they were broke and owed a board bill back in Salt Lake City. I asked Andy if Jack could wrestle. He said sure, he was a good wrestler.

"I could always scare up a crowd pretty near whenever I wrestled, so we rented the Olathe opera house for $10, printed some handbills for $3.50 more and put on the match. I found right away I wouldn't have any trouble taking care of Jack, but I carried him for half an hour just to give the crowd a show.

TALK ABOUT TIRED—you could've made a laprobe of Jack's tongue. So I had to put him away for the first fall and then got him for the second after 10 minutes more.

"But we'd given the crowd their money's worth at 50 cents a head. We cleared $110 and I gave 90 of it to Jack. He and Andy were able to ride back to Salt Lake on the cushions."

The bear wrestling came later when Parrish was with the Texas Bud show. The bear wore a muzzle as well as leather pads covering its claws, but it still could throw a terrific roundhouse with either paw.

"That bear got to be crazy about me," Ben says. "And he loved our wrestling matches. But if I happened to get cute with him, he'd get mad and let me have it. Many's the time he bounced me off the ropes 18 feet across that ring."

Take Care When Burning Trash

Fire safety officials warn against burning refuse in open piles outside homes, since sudden gusts of wind often carry flaming particles to inflammable roof tops and start destructive home fires. A safe practice is to use galvanized steel rubbish burners.

Galvanized steel rubbish burners have all-metal bodies and tops which are perforated to permit waste materials to burn rapidly without any danger of being blown away. All such burners are coated with zinc to resist rust and corrosion.

Kitchen Renovation

Combinations of plain, lined, and tiled patterned predecorated panelboard can work startling changes in an old, tired kitchen, bathroom, or recreation room. Large sheets of this comparatively new building material are available in sizes up to 4 by 12 feet, and can be applied by a competent carpenter or an experienced home handy man to any flat, dry, wall surface.

How to Mark Door Hinges

For precise alignment of door and casing, the following method of marking location of hinges is recommended: bring two halves of hinges together at right angles to each other; invert butt and hold it firmly against casing with one hand while marking around narrow half with pencil.

Care, Feeding of Oak Floors

THE CONDITION of your floors makes a lot of difference in the appearance of your home. Floors are an integral part of the decorative plan.

Proper care of oak floors, the kind generally found in modern homes, requires only a moderate amount of time and effort. It is this ease of maintenance which has played a big part in establishing their widespread popularity. More American dwellings are floored with oak than with all other materials combined.

One of the basic suggestions for good care is daily sweeping with an untreated dust mop. Requiring only a few minutes, this quick once-over removes loose dust and dirt which otherwise might dim the luster of the finish.

Authorities on the subject stress that the mop should be untreated. Application of oil, once favored by many, has been ruled out. It has been found that oil tends to soften the finish and makes it vulnerable to dirt and marring.

Periodic cleaning, waxing and polishing are recommended to preserve the finish and bring out the full natural beauty of the wood. The frequency can depend upon the traffic the floor receives. In the average home about three or four times a year is sufficient.

Scrubbing not only is unnecessary, but is frowned on by the experts, who point out that repeated application of soap and water will harm the finish and raise the grain, causing a rough surface. Cleaning preferably should be done with one of the wax-base preparations now on the market.

Easy to use, such cleaners remove the soiled wax and leave a thin protective film which teams up with the newly applied wax to guard the wood pores against dirt penetration.

The wax also serves to brighten the floor and emphasizes its attractive grain patterns and color tones. Either the paste type of hardwood floor wax or the liquid type known as rubbing wax can be employed with pleasing results.

In applying, be sure to follow the manufacturer's directions, which may vary slightly with different brands. For polishing, a soft cloth, weighted floor brush or electric polisher can be used.

The Modern Water Heater's A Machine of Many Parts

NOWADAYS one buys hot water rather than a hot-water tank.

Size in outside dimensions or storage capacity is not necessarily a gauge of how much hot water a tank delivers, due to innovations that have increased the recovery rate. This is particularly true of gas heaters.

Hot water has become one of the more precious commodities around a house. The average household needs at least 50 gallons of hot water daily. The confusing factor is that not just any hot water will do any more.

Automatic dish-washing machines for best results in rinsing dishes need water at a temperature of 180 degrees.

CLOTHES-WASHING machines require a maximum temperature of 160 degrees. But no one wants these temperatures in the hot water faucet where someone may be scalded while washing. Water at 140 degrees is considered hot enough for bathroom use.

Water heaters today can be adjusted to deliver water of a desired temperature to specific areas of the house. This is one of the major conveniences of modern water heating equipment to remember.

What is of the utmost importance in newest water heaters is the performance rating. This means the amount of hot water the heater is capable of producing during a given period of time.

As was mentioned, the exterior size of the tank may have nothing to do with it. A system of increasing the so-called recovery rate of gas water heaters has resulted in more hot water from smaller tanks.

In other words, if you want more hot water and want to replace a present tank, you do not necessarily need a larger tank. You do need to know how much hot water you need.

This depends on the number of automatic appliances the household possesses now or is looking forward to owning in the future. The number of persons in the family also affects the amount of hot water needed daily from the tank.

Charts to estimate these needs are available from manufacturers and dealers of the water heaters. Once you have determined the amount of hot water needed, one must know how much hot water a given heater will provide at full temperature.

For the economy of operation it is best to install the automatic water heater close to hot-water outlets.

New heaters not only operate more efficiently than older models but also look much handsomer. Exteriors are styled in trim painted jackets that won't catch dust. Interiors are designed for long life. Improved insulation that will perform its job over a period of time is found in today's tanks.

Once automatic controls are adjusted, to deliver water as needed, modern tanks run by themselves.

Light Steel Joists Make Floors Safer

LIGHTWEIGHT steel joists used with floor and roof deck framing can furnish a rigid and fire-safe floor construction.

Available in standard depths ranging from 8 to 16 inches, the joists can be used for spans up to 32 feet. Either a concrete or wood subfloor construction can be used with them.

Slabs 2 inches thick are usually poured over metal lath or paper-backed wire mesh laid across the joist. Conventional floor coverings for concrete slabs provide finished flooring.

Out of the Infant Stage

Asbestos-cement roofing shingles were first manufactured in the United States in the early 1900s. Their popularity as a fire-safe roofing material led to the development of a whole family of building materials. Asbestos-cement products now include siding shingles, flat sheets and corrugated sheets, in addition to roofing shingles.

Fixing Noisy Doors

If a door that rattles in the wind keeps you awake at nights, here's a suggestion: Stretch a few rubber bands around the two knobs. This will cushion the door so that no sound will be heard.

Big Home Repair Bill

American families will spend an estimated $835,000,000 this year for structural changes to homes, new front porches and such additions as tiled bathrooms, powder rooms and breakfast nooks, according to the Tile Council of America.

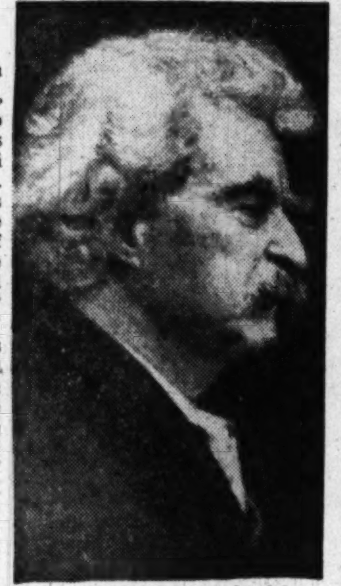
Birthday Thursday

Following Mark Twain's Trail

By Walter W. Hubbard
American Automobile Association

THERE ARE few men in America who have not, as boys, yearned to sail out on a raft to see the world, explore a pirate's cave, dig for gold or pilot a steamboat on a mighty river. On Thursday, November 30, this year, the world — at least the literary world and the world of make believe — will pay homage to a man who made boyhood dreams and ambitions live vividly in the minds of millions.

One hundred and fifteen years ago, November 30, John Marshall Clemens' wife presented him with a baby boy. The couple named him Samuel Langhorne Clemens. The event took place in the little community of Florida in Monroe County, Mo., which even today has a population of hardly over 100. It lies on the south side of the Salt River, which winds in a northeasterly direction to the Mississippi.



Mark Twain . . . a birthday coming

Today, at the juncture of Missouri State Highways 154 and 107, is Mark Twain State Park, an 1184-acre tract a half mile south of Florida, which contains the birthplace of Mark Twain. The house, which exhibits many objects relating to his life, is open to the public without charge. And, appropriately, there are nearby facilities for fishing, picnicking, camping.

MARK TWAIN State Park, southwest of Hannibal and somewhat northeast of Jefferson City, capital of the Ozark State, is but a speck compared to the four separate and huge areas in south central and southwestern Missouri set aside by the United States Government as Mark Twain National Forest.

Motorists and tourists, however, probably find the greatest interest in the life of Sam Clemens in the town of Hannibal, to which, when he was 4, the family had moved. Vacationists from east of the Mississippi enter Hannibal over Mark Twain Memorial Bridge. The major north-south highway feeding into Hannibal is U.S. 61, which runs from Port Arthur to New Orleans.

The family homestead and Mark Twain Museum, 206-208 Hill st., was built over a century ago by Mark's father. The plain, wooden building with its painted, shuttered windows, has been open to the public since 1911, and contains pictures, furniture of the nineteenth century, and the room occupied by young Samuel.

Riverview Park, called "one of the seven beauty spots of Missouri," consists of over 200 acres with winding drives through wooded dells and along picturesque crests. About 300 feet above the river, at Inspiration Point, a life-size statue of the writer and lecturer overlooks the river's valley. The monument, at the foot of Cardiff Hill where young Sam Clemens played as a boy, depicts those famous fictional characters of typical American boyhood — Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn.

MARK TWAIN CAVE, however, is one of Hannibal's principal showplaces. It lies next to the Mississippi, two miles below the town, on an all-weather highway. Guides will point out that this labyrinthine limestone cavern, free from mud and dampness and electrically lighted, was the one in which Mark Twain was lost several times. He describes it in his "Adventures of Tom Sawyer," and the "Betty Thatcher" of that tale was Laura Hawkins, who lived across the street. The immensity of the Cave's Reception Hall, with its high vaulted ceiling and jagged sides, is impressive.

At the north end of Main st., Hannibal, rises the 54-foot Mark Twain Memorial Lighthouse, dedicated in 1935, on the centennial of his birth.

Twain's life was an anomaly, in that, without any formal education whatever, he became one of the literary geniuses of the world and was awarded a degree of Doctor of Literature at Oxford. The man whose first successful literary effort was a screaming comedy entitled: "Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" was to spend 14 years of his life in preparation for the writing at Florence, Italy, of the "Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc," which many French authorities have pronounced the greatest life of their patron saint ever published.

It was while working in Virginia City, Nev., on the "Enterprise" — after an unsuccessful experience as a gold miner — that he adopted the name "Mark Twain." The expression comes from the ways of the big, flat-bottomed river boats. When they came down the Mississippi, the cry "mark twain!" was heard frequently as they approached the Memphis bluffs. The leadsman, when he called "mark twain," meant that there were two fathoms of water under the boat. Hearing the cry in the pilot house, the pilot knew his channel was clear.

ELMIRA, N. Y., lays claim to connections with Mark Twain, who had married a resident of that city. Woodlawn Cemetery, Elmira, contains the grave of Samuel Langhorne Clemens, who had spent many of his summers there, and there is a park named after him. Half a mile beyond the city limits, on Quarry Farm, is to be seen the Mark Twain Study, built as a replica of a Mississippi River steamboat pilot house.

In Hartford, Conn., the author of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" learned to like the Nutmeg State. He built a house here the year he was married and lived in Hartford for 30 years. One wing of the house somewhat resembles the pilot house of a steamboat, to remind Twain of his days on the river. The Mark Twain Home and Memorial Library is open weekdays to visitors.

Mark Twain was nearly 75 when he died at Redding, Conn., April 21, 1910.

Because of his tales of life on the Mississippi and of America's Far West, his book on a French heroine, his "Roughing It," "Following the Equator," "Innocents Abroad," and other stories and books of a similar character, he has probably done more to encourage domestic and foreign travel on the part of Americans than any other single individual.

Giza, Egypt . . . Breakfast at the Pyramids. The locale is the famous Mena House and in the background is the Great Pyramid of Cheops, 451 feet high, a wonder of the world

New 'Old Ironsides' to Sail Seas in Merchant Marine

NEW YORK (U.P.).—The American merchant marine soon will have its first ship named Constitution. Launched on September 16 at Quincy, Mass., and still under construction, the new S S. Constitution is the first passenger ship in this country's history to bear the honored name of "Old Ironsides."

The new S.S. Constitution will enter trans-Atlantic service next April, sailing from New York to Italy and France on a regular express route for the American Export Lines.

The Constitution is a sister ship of the S.S. Independence, which was launched a few months earlier in the same shipyard. The two are the largest passenger ships constructed in this country in almost eleven years.

Few today know that Old Ironsides, the frigate famous in American naval history of 150 years ago, is not only in existence but is still a ship commissioned in the U. S. Navy. Her present location is at Boston Navy Yard, only a few miles from the yard at Quincy where her modern namesake is being built.

A COMPARISON of the new Constitution with Old Ironsides reveals how greatly ships have grown in size in the last 150 years. The length of the older ship over-all was 204 feet, her beam 43 feet as compared with the newer ship's 683 feet in length and 89 feet molded breadth. In tonnage the comparison is particularly striking. Old Ironsides displaced 2,200 tons while the new American Export Liner will displace 30,100 tons.

Cruises to Round South America

Thomas Cook & Son have announced two winter cruise-tours around South America of 58 days and 45 days, respectively. The longer trip will sail from New York January 10 on the Moore-McCormack liner "Argentina" to Trinidad, Rio de Janeiro, Santos, Sao Paulo, Montevideo and Buenos Aires. Members of the group leave the ship at Buenos Aires for a 9-day tour of the Argentine and Chilean Lakes Region, continuing northward up the west coast to Santiago, Vina del Mar and Valparaiso, where they join the Pacific Steam Navigation Company's liner "Reina del Pacifico" for the homeward voyage via Antofagasta, Lima, La Libertad, Panama Canal, Cartagena and Havana. The tour ends at Miami on March 9. The fare is $1954.

The shorter trip combines air and steamer services, beginning at New Orleans on January 5; the group will fly first to Guatemala for a tour of the Highlands, then continue to Panama, Lima, Santiago and through the Lakes Region to Buenos Aires and Montevideo. Here they will board the "Argentina" for a homeward cruise that includes a visit to Rio de Janeiro during the Mardi Gras Carnival. This tour ends at New York on February 19. The fare is $2050.

Largest Animal Park

Kruger National Park in South Africa is the largest game reserve in the world, covering an area almost the size of New Jersey, according to American Express Travel Service. The sanctuary abounds with hundreds of species of game, ranging from hyenas to velvet monkeys. Only camera hunting is permitted on the reserve.

Play Resources Lagging, AAA Official Warns

A WARNING that development of the Nation's recreational resources is lagging behind the needs of an expanding population has been sounded by Charles F. Pratt, supervisor of touring services, D. C. division, A.A.A.

"In 50 years the country's population has almost doubled," Pratt pointed out. "At the same time, more and more people have come to recognize recreation and vacation travel as part of the pattern of modern living. Unfortunately, however, we have not taken adequate steps to provide sufficient recreation areas for 150 million Americans."

Pratt cited these figures, provided by the American Automobile Association, to indicate the increased use of present recreational facilities:

National Parks were visited in 1949 by 28 million persons, an increase of 77 percent over 1938.

National Forests were visited in 1949 by 26 million persons, an increase of 80 percent over 1938.

State Parks were visited in 1949 by 107 million persons, an increase of almost 10 percent over 1941.

"These figures in themselves reflect the Nation's high standard of living," he declared, "and show that Americans have the means and the desire for healthy, outdoor recreational travel. Yet they also point up the need for concerted planning by Government agencies at all levels to provide and develop new and larger recreation resources."

Pratt said that in recent years vast new travel areas have emerged as by-products of Federal water-control projects — dams, reservoirs, irrigation, power and navigation projects. Among the most popular of these are Lake Mead at Hoover Dam, in Arizona and Nevada; Franklin D. Roosevelt Lake, Grand Coulee Dam, Washington; and the lakes of the TVA system. He said development of these areas might well provide the key to the future of the Nation's recreation—"if Federal, State and local governments, working together with travel and recreation groups, can evolve a long-range program to provide outdoor enjoyment for the American people."

McGee Cabin Still Stands

SAM McGEE, the man who, according to Canadian poet Robert W. Service, was cremated by a pal on the shores of Lake LeBarge around the turn of the century, passed away in Calgary, Alberta, September 11, 1940. His cabin still stands in Whitehorse, Yukon Territory.

Service's ballad, "The Cremation of Sam McGee," brought fame both to the writer and to Sam. On a visit to Whitehorse in 1938, on a prospecting trip, Sam McGee was photographed in front of his cabin, on the grounds near which may still be seen one of the old stage coaches used on the Overland Trail to Dawson City in gold rush days, and also a war canoe of the LeBarge Indians.

Efforts are being made to turn the "Sam McGee" cabin into a repository for historical relics tracing the lusty history of Whitehorse through the gold rush era.

Church at Lima

A great "find" is under way currently at Lima, Peru, at the Church of San Francisco, first established about 1555 by the religious order which bears its name, points out the American Express Travel Service. Behind the ornate front of the Church and beneath the gold encrusted altar, vaulted chambers have been discovered leading three stories down from the level of the church. Others, under the main floor, are believed to connect with the government palace two blocks away and are said to have been used as an escape passage. Some of Peru's finest churches are found in prehistoric Cuzco, for centuries the holy city of the Children of the Sun.

New Tacoma Narrows Bridge Boosts Puget Sound Travel

"STURDY GERTIE," dedicated in mid-October, opens a new avenue of tourist travel and commerce in the Puget Sound region—the well watered northwestern corner of Washington State.

"She" is the mile-long Tacoma Narrows suspension bridge. Her sturdy girders are estimated to be 58 times as collapse-proof as those of her predecessor, which crashed in 1940 after only four months of service. Commuters had dubbed the 1940 bridge "Galloping Gertie" soon after it was opened because of the way it kited and swayed in high winds, notes the National Geographic Society.

Tacoma, "lumber capital of America," lies on the southeastern shore of Puget Sound. Its new bridge leads west across the five-mile-long Narrows to Kitsap County, a work-and-play peninsula formed between Puget Sound proper and the fjordlike natural arm called the Hood Canal.

WELL WATERED in more ways than one, the nation's north-western corner includes 2000 square miles of placid inland sea reaching southward between snow-capped mountains to the east and west. Rugged Olympic Peninsula heights to the west take the country's heaviest rainfall—more than 200 inches at some points in wet years. East of the Sound, Mt. Rainier, Glacier Peak, Mt. Baker, and many others stand out in the Cascade Range.

The region's 2000 square miles of sheltered ocean inlet includes as many linear miles of coastline. Of more than 200 islands that help to make the tangle of bays, waterways, and natural harbors, Whidbey, the largest, is second only to Long Island among United States isles.

Reaching from the town of Blaine and the Point Roberts enclave on the international boundary's forty-ninth parallel, this scenic shipping haven takes in the southern end of the Strait of Georgia, the straits and bays of the San Juan Archipelage, and most of the waters of Juan de Fuca, a broad, deep lane to the Pacific.

PUGET SOUND proper and the Hood Canal form a double fishhook southward 75 miles into the Evergreen State from the Strait of Juan de Fuca. It was just over a century ago that white settlers came to Olympia, now the state capital A city of 16,000 people, it lies at the tip of Budd Inlet, southernmost arm of Puget Sound's waters.

In the 1950 census preliminary count, Seattle, midway on Puget Sound's east coast, is hub of a metropolitan area of 731,117 people. Tacoma, only 24 air miles south, lifts the population of the two city trading areas above the one million mark.

Everett and Bellingham, on the Sound north of Seattle, count 34,000 residents each. Bremerton, naval and shipbuilding center on Kitsap Peninsula, with 28,000, helps to give Puget Sound a near monopoly on Washington cities. Spokane is the only large size center in the dry eastern part of the State.

SETTING THE TEMPO of progress for this fast growing region of lumbering, fishing, mining, shipping, and varied manufacturing industries, Seattle is now in its 100th year. It bounded back rapidly from the fire which leveled its business section in 1889—the year Washington State entered the Union.

Seattle became the "Gateway to Alaska" with the Klondike gold strike of 1897, surged forward with the timber trade that followed, passed the 100-million-dollar mark in its two-way annual commerce during World War II.

Unique feature of Seattle's harbor is the fresh-water section, a big part of the waterfront of 193 miles. By way of Ballard Locks, ocean-going ships enter fresh-water Lake Union at the city's heart, and pass on to 26-mile-long Lake Washington, bordering Seattle on the east. Barnacles, curse of shipping in many parts of the world, soon die and drop from hulls that reach Seattle's saltless piers.

So. America Gets a Boost

LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP THEN GO TO SOUTH AMERICA. By Kilda Harrell. 175 pp. $2.75.

WHEN YOU cruise to South America, and you will certainly want to after reading "Look Before You Leap," remember:

(1) Go first class (you can have much more fun that way).

(2) Take seasick pills.

(3) Don't forget plenty of sports clothes.

(4) Keep the portholes closed when you dock or you may lose your shirts and "mucho dinero" which you will certainly need, the more the better.

This and other advice on how to be a happy tourist is beamed especially to those of the feminine sex with husbands who can pay the freight, and comes from "sea-leg" experience. Author Harrell and her daughter, Betty, took a recent junket south of the Equator, and all that was seen, felt, heard and imagined is reported in gossipy, chatty prose.

The Harrells, who call Washington and New York home, visited Bahia, Rio de Janeiro and Santos in Brazil; Montevideo, Uruguay; Buenos Aires, Argentina; and Trinidad.

Lake of Thun Boat Paradise

LAKE OF THUN, Switzerland. The Lake of Thun, at the foot of the Bernese Oberland, is known as a "Mediterranean Oasis," owing to its exceptionally mild climate. Because of its geographical position and favorable winds, the Lake of Thun has become famous as Switzerland's foremost yachting lake.

Experienced yachtsmen will find boats of various types available for their use. Those who have no sailing experience may attend the celebrated Yachting School, taking part in one or all of the courses of instruction, which comprise seven half-days of practical sailing and theoretical instruction.

The visitor who prefers to try it on his own may hire a sailing boat and cruise to the lovely little resorts on the lake. Those who wish to be just spectators may relax on the shore and watch the smart yachts and smaller craft weave an intricate pattern on the mirror-like surface of the lake.

Parliament Buildings Attract U. S. Visitors

Sightseers in London are granted a privilege which is denied the King himself—permission to enter the House of Commons.

The House of Commons has been forbidden ground to Kings of England since 1642, when Charles I tried to enter with his soldiers to arrest political dissenters, according to the British Travel Association.

Visitors to this historic site, where Parliaments have been held since 1510, will see that the Lower House, shattered by Nazi bombs in 1941, has been repaired and the Strangers' Gallery enlarged. Wood carvings and paneling for the new House of Commons have been made from oak trees planted 300 years ago on the estate of the Duke of Hereford.

New Fame In Store for Pa. Hamlet

GREATER FAME lies ahead for King of Prussia, crossroads hamlet near historic Valley Forge. The little community 15 miles northwest of Philadelphia finds itself on the eastern end of the broad Pennsylvania Turnpike.

Few among the many American place names that stem from the Old World's royal houses carry a stronger connotation of monarchy or imperialism. That regal names survive in a democracy demonstrates the tolerance inherent in the democratic way of life.

Royalty survives inconspicuously, notes the National Geographic Society, in the names of States that were colonies. Georgia honors British King George II. Virginia honors Elizabeth, the "virgin queen." Charles I and his wife take tribute from the names of Carolina and Maryland. Louisiana was named for Louis XIV of France.

WITHIN VIRGINIA and Maryland especially do royal patrons of the American colonies live on in names of counties, towns, hilltops, and streams. Among Virginia's 100 counties, one is called King and Queen; six include both royal title and name—King George, King William, Prince Edward, Prince George, Prince William, and Princess Anne.

Royal names without titles among Virginia counties include Caroline, Charles City, Charlotte, Elizabeth City, Frederick, Henry and James City. The James River and Jamestown, Williamsburg and William and Mary College, Charlottesville and Fredericksburg are well known.

County names in Maryland honoring an English queen, her consort and her heir apparent are Queen Annes, Prince Georges and Frederick. Annapolis, the State capital, and its county, Anne Arundel, commemorate the wife of Cecilius, Lord Baltimore. Besides Baltimore and Cecil, Princess Anne, Prince Frederick, Queenstown, Leonardtown, Benedict, Charles and Calvert are solid Maryland names traceable to royal origins.

New York has its Kings, Queens and Dutchess Counties. Throughout the Nation towns named Kingston, Princeton, Royalton, Royal, Le Roy, Duke, Empire, Imperial and the like, add up to several score. Missouri has a Kaiser, West Virginia has a Czar.

KING OF PRUSSIA'S cluster of houses nestles around a tavern built in 1709. The King of Prussia Inn was named for the Brandenburg prince who in 1701 lifted Prussia from the status of a duchy to that of a kingdom and took the title, King Frederick I.

Great wide chimneys at the two gable ends of the white stucco hostelry proclaim the big fireplaces within. A full-length second-story front porch and a weathered signboard picturing King Frederick on horseback bespeak its colonial origin.

Whistle Stopping

And Boy, Was That Turkey Burned Up

By Orval Hopkins

I WAS able, through the use of simple skulduggery, to intercept the following report about Thanksgiving which my wife had written a friend:

"Dear Judy,

"Well, it was over the river and through the stuff, to grandmother's house we go for Thanksgiving. Orval had to work, so I piled the kids in the car, gently placed my punkin chiffon pie on the front seat and headed across Key Bridge. Halfway across, some madman dashes out in front of me. You can imagine the fun I had stopping the car, avoiding hitting the man, and trying to keep the kids from piling up on the punkin chiffon pie.

"Arrived, I found Mother in tears, Daddy swearing horribly, and flames issuing from the oven. The turkey, help us all, was on fire. I never did get to the bottom of that, but daddy snaked it out and sort of peeled off the burnt part and it tasted wonderful. We had a huge bottle of wine with it. (We used to call this dago red, but we don't any more, and it's too bad.)

"Orval finally arrived with a big 'I'm here, you lucky people.' How can he be such a fool. Must close now. I think the chitlins are on fire. Love as ever,

"Mary Jane"

SOMEBODY (doubtless an anonymous admirer) has sent me a box of delicious pralinettes from Laura's in New Orleans. I thought, upon opening them, that "pralinettes" simply meant pralines-all-broken-up. Turns out it just meant pralines, junior grade. Anyway, they're good, and I thank yez.

ORLANDO, Fla., boasts that it has a mean annual temperature of about 73 degrees—68 in winter and about 79 in summer. The Florida camellia show is scheduled for Orlando January 12, 13 and 14.

AIR CRUISES to Hawaii are now being offered by American Airlines, which flies the customer to San Francisco or Los Angeles and connects with Pan American for the run to the islands.

INTENSIVE redecorating (there is no redecorating that is not intensive) is now going on at the Martinique Hotel in Miami Beach. Gordon Jesso is remaining as manager at the Martinique, although Charles Cohen has transferred his interest in the hotel to his associates.

ORANGE BLOSSOM Special, Seabord Line's all-Pullman luxury train, starts a new season of service to Florida December 14. The train leaves Washington at 6:05 p. m. daily, arriving in Miami at 3:15 the next afternoon. Other Seabord data: Silver Star leaves Washington at 2:10 p. m. starting December 1; Silver Meteor leaves here at 7:15 starting December 14; Palmland leaves here at 1:10 p. m. and the Sunland at 3:30 p. m., both starting December 1. Seabord reports it will operate two holiday specials to leave New York at 1:10 p. m. December 16 and 23.

Miami Braces For Orange Bowl Fiesta

MIAMI, Fla.—Seventeenth annual Orange Bowl festival, which annually attracts more than 500,000 persons, will get under way here Christmas night.

The North-South college football game in the Orange Bowl that night will kick off the nine-day festival, climaxed by the New Year's Day game between two college teams.

Other events on the program include the Orange Bowl junior boys and girls tennis championships, two collegiate basketball games featuring University of Miami against Dartmouth and Yale, the Orange Bowl kickoff luncheon, King Orange Jamboree Parade and the Orange Bowl mortorboat regatta.

Theme of this year's King Orange Jamboree Parade, which annually attracts 200,000 spectators, will be "American Holidays."

The halftime extravaganza at the New Year's Day game, always an array of colorful pageantry, will feature more than 1000 people. Approximately 300 drum majors and majorettes are slated for starring roles.

Ernie Seiler, managing director of the Orange Bowl committee, said a survey last winter revealed 40 percent of attendance at Orange Bowl games is due to the halftime show.

Leading racers of both outboard and inboard speedboats will compete in the Orange Bowl motorboat regatta December 31.

FOR TENNIS enthusiasts, the fourth annual international Orange Bowl junior boys and girls tennis championships, boasting contestants from Latin America, Canada and the United States, will be staged December 26-31.

The University of Miami will play host to Dartmouth in an intersectional basketball game in the Coliseum on December 27. Miami will meet Yale two nights later, December 29, in another intersectional clash.

The nine-day festival will be climaxed with a gigantic fireworks display in the Orange Bowl January 2. In addition to a fireworks display, a reenactment of the Orange Bowl halftime show and the entire King Orange Jamboree Parade will be repeated.

Yanks in Britain Go Fox Hunting on Bikes

A man once said he would give his kingdom for a horse, but fox-hunting in Britain these days is not quite that expensive. United States visitors to Great Britain have been enjoying the sport by riding to the hounds on bicycles.

The cyclists naturally miss out on the steeplechase aspect of the hunt, usually having to keep to the lanes and footpaths. But Americans who prefer to follow the hounds more stylishly in "pink" coats and on horseback, sign up with the local Hunt secretary. He will tell visitors the best place to rent a horse and explain some of the subtler shibboleths and customs of the hunting field, according to the British Travel Association.

A "cap" charge of $4 entitles a visiting hunter to one day's ride with any of 200 packs in Britain. The Pytchley, Quorn and Fernie packs are among the most famous.

Major points of interest near Las Vegas include Mt. Charleston, Hoover Dam and Lake Mead. The latter, with its 550-mile shoreline, offers year 'round fishing, boating, water skiing and other aquatic sports.

Chinese Held Unhappy Over Fighting U. S.

CHONGJU, Korea, Nov. 25 (AP). Evidence is piling up that Chinese Communist soldiers are not happy about having to fight United States troops in Korea.

A smiling Chinese, taken captive today at this highway hub on the road to Manchuria, explained it to an interpreter this way:

"We came here expecting to fight South Koreans, but the United Nations army is too strong. That is why many of us are returning north."

Whether the prisoner, Hwang Ai, was telling the truth, or merely repeating a clever propaganda line, there is much that bears out his statement.

Time and again, Americans have pushed through Red-held territory against slight to no resistance. In other sectors, at almost the same time, South Korean troops have run into a Chinese buzz saw.

There are other indications. Since they entered the Korean war Chinese troops have repeatedly treated prisoners with care. They have given the same rations as their own troops received. They have provided all available medical care. So far they have conducted 57 Americans back to the front and showed them how to reach U. N. lines.

One after another, Chinese prisoners have told interrogators they did not know they were going to fight Americans. And they have expressed pleasure at being taken prisoner and freed from the prospect of continuing that fight.

The Chinese POWs have indicated they have no real interest in Korea. They would much prefer to be back in China.

This does not mean the Chinese are not putting up a fight. Nor does it mean that the Reds from across the border have not taken a heavy toll of American lives. They have.

"They don't run when you beat them," said a Twenty-fourth Division veteran, Lieutenant Jo[illegible] Ufner of Butler, Pa. "And they are a lot better at night fighting than the North Koreans ever were. They crawl right up and drop grenades into your foxholes."

There is evidence, too, that the Chinese have not sent their best troops into the Korea war. Most of the prisoners taken have been either recent recruits or veterans of Chiang Kai-Shek's armies which surrendered to the Communists.

The absence of Red Army veterans had convinced many observers the Chinese Communist intervention here is a political gesture rather than a serious military effort.

Trucker Jailed in Virginia May Be Free for Christmas

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

CARRY ME BACK—Mrs. Sarah Erico, 21, of Middletown, Conn., whose husband is being held in the Accomac, Va., jail, said yesterday she "didn't know where our next meal is coming from." William Erico, 25, was sentenced to 60 days after he was unable to pay a $1077 fine on a charge of driving an overloaded truck. Mrs. Erico is shown trying to amuse her two children, Ruth Ann (left) and Patty ACCOMACK, Va., Nov. 25 (AP).—William Erico apparently will get out of jail here in time to spend Christmas with his near-destitute wife and children in Middletown, Conn.

Any hopes he had of release before completion of a 60-day sentence on December 23 were considerably dimmed today by the judge who sent him to prison.

Trial Justice L. Brooks Smith said Erico "used his imagination" when he tearfully told his wife by telephone that he might go free on probation a week before his term is over.

Erico went to jail here October 23 when he was convicted of driving a truck overloaded by 21,400 pounds on northern Virginia highways and was unable to pay a fine of $1077.

Mrs. Erico told reporters in Middletown that she and her two small daughters "don't know where our next meal is coming from." She said meager funds provided by her mother and her husband's employer, the Scata Trucking Co. of Hartford, Conn., had run out and "we spent a miserable Thanksgiving."

Justice Smith and other Accomack County authorities took the position today that they were only enforcing Virginia law when Erico was arrested and sentenced in lieu of payment of the fine.

Justice Smith said, "if you want to do something about the overloading law, you can take it up with the State Legislature. It's on the books and all I do is enforce the law. I try a lot of these cases every week. They run into the hundreds."

Sheriff George Hope said Erico was driving along a back road of the county, trying to avoid the weighing station at New Church, when he was arrested.

County Girl Wins State Voice Contest

A 15-year-old Montgomery County girl, urged by her English teacher to enter the Voice of Democracy essay contest, learned yesterday that she won the Maryland state finals.

The winner, Pegg Janney, of Brookeville, said she couldn't believe her ears when she heard her name in a broadcast as she was motoring home from a camping trip. The broadcast came from WGAY, which conducted the state and county finals.

Pegg, who says she is only an average English composition student, was persuaded to enter the competition by Miss Ellen Whitmore, a teacher at Sherwood High School in Sandy Spring. A high school junior, Pegg is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Janney. Her father is a farmer.

Runners-up in the State competition were Virginia Mulcahy, Seton High School, Baltimore; Richard Dailey, Fort Hill High School, Cumberland, and Henry A. Myers, Hagerstown High School.

A transcription of Pegg's essay will now be sent to headquarters to the National Association of Broadcasting to be entered with the winners in other States and two territories, said Ernie Tannen, WGAY program director.

The national winners, four in all, will receive $500 scholarships and trips to Washington.

The Washington trip would be old stuff to Pegg should she win, but she is thrilled over the prospect of the scholarship.

Judges in the Maryland contest were Mrs. Emil Snith, president of the Maryland Congress of Parents and Teachers; Mayor G. LaMar Kelly of Rockville, president of the Maryland Municipal League, and Sidney Sulkin, assistant chief of the Washington bureau of the Voice of America.

Chicago Grain

CHICAGO, Nov. 25 (AP).—Grains recovered today from the severe pounding they took in the previous session.

The recovery didn't wipe out all of yesterday's losses, or come close to it, but the bulls were nevertheless heartened by a lack of follow-through selling on that break.

Feed grains showed the most strength while soybeans had the hardest time in righting themselves, particularly in the fore part of the session.

Wheat closed 1⅛-1½ higher, corn 1⅜-2⅜ higher, oats 1⅜-2⅛ higher, rye 1¼ to 2 cents higher, soybeans 1⅛-2⅜ higher and lard 30 to 35 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Furniture Trade Setting Record

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Nov. 25 (AP).—The present year will be one of the biggest in the history of the furniture industry statistician Frank E. Seidman reported today.

Speaking of the industry nationally, Seidman said: "Shipments in dollars for the first 10 months of the year, with the current backlog of orders, indicate that 1950 will exceed 1948, the previous peak year.

"October shipments," he said, were the heaviest of the entire year and appear to have established a new all-time record for dollar amount in any one month. For the 10 months shipments were ahead of 1949 by 32 per cent and ahead of 1948 by 8 percent."

American Broadcasting Shows $877,000 Loss

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (AP).—The American Broadcasting Co., Inc., and subsidiaries have reported an estimated loss of $877,000 for the nine months ended September 30.

This compares with a loss of $779,000 in the like period of last year. That amount, however, was reduced by $297,000 for recovery of Federal income taxes under carry-back provisions of the internal revenue code, to a net loss of $482,000.

The losses were reportedly due to fast expansion in the television field by the company, which operates five television stations and a television network service, as well as a redio network and stations. The report also does not reflect considerable new business obtained in both radio and television in the past couple of weeks.

$87,000,000 Steel Mill Initiated by Chile

CONCEPCION, Chile, Nov. 25 (AP).—The $87,000,000 Huachipato steel mill, one of Latin America's largest, was initiated here today by President Gabriel Gonzalez Videla.

The plant, said the president, is an important part of Chile's "industrial revolution." This revolution, he said, would be climaxed in 1952 with completion of petroleum, electrical and metal smelting plants. The president thanked the United States Government and the Export-Import Bank for financial assistance that made possible the new steel mill.

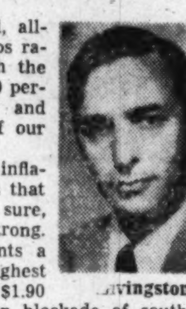
Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Boom Loses Two of Main Props

The economic dice have been cast. But they haven't stopped rolling.

We're going to find out pretty soon what kind of an America we'll be living in during 1951 and 1952, what kind of lives we'll be able to lead—free or restricted.



Livingston

We'll learn whether we can escape rigid, all-out price controls, wage stabilization, perhaps rationing, or whether we have to go through the same tight regulations in the present 10-to-20 percent war as in the war against Germany and Japan, which required nearly 50 percent of our national resources and energies.

The main battle at home still is against inflation. And at the moment, the good news is that inflation has lost some of its zing. To be sure, commodity prices are still powerfully strong. Cotton, for instance, pushed above 44 cents a pound, before selling off. That was the highest price since the Civil War, when it sold at $1.90 a pound in New York because of the Union blockade of southern ports.

People still argue that goods are going to get still scarcer, therefore anything you can lay your hands on is better than money in the bank. That explains the continued rise in business loans, which brought forth another warning from Federal Reserve Board Chairman Thomas B. McCabe. He advised bankers to "whoa." Most commodities, like rubber, metals, textiles, are in great demand—for inventory purposes. And the stock market keeps pushing upward. Wall Streeters argue with increasing vehemence the virtues of common stocks as hedges against inflation.

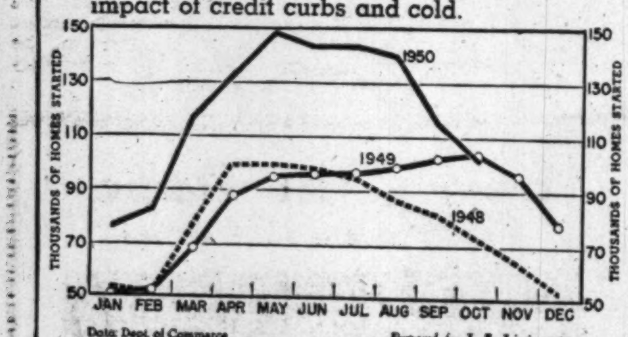
Nevertheless, a business setback, which would simultaneously "roll back" inflation and stave off pressures for price-and-wage controls, may be in the making. The boom has lost its two main props—automobiles and housing.

800,000 Vs. 1,300,000 Homes

Tightening installment credit terms—Regulation W—has put a crimp in automobile demand, especially for used cars. A letdown was entirely possible anyway. Record-breaking sales this year and last went far toward catching up with pent-up demand.

Similarly, in home-building, record construction has all but met

REGULATION X AND WEATHER
New home building falls below 1949 under impact of credit curbs and cold.



Data: Dept. of Commerce — Prepared for J. A. Livingston

the most urgent needs. And Regulation X has made credit harder to get. Contractors are therefore going slow. That, along with cold weather, has reduced new housing undertakings from an all-time monthly high of 149,000 in May to 103,000 in October. Next year's new housing starts are estimated at 800,000 as against 1,300,000 this year.

The controls introduced by the National Production Authority cutting back civilian uses of aluminum and cobalt and, inevitably, reductions in steel and copper are also "bearish." They mean, dislocations in production of durable goods—autos, radios, televisions, vacuum cleaners, and so on. They suggest layoffs of some workers, possible reductions in the work week until defense orders increase.

At the same time, the pressure of the Federal Reserve Board on banks to cut down lendings may become effective. In which case, business men will find they can't raise money readily to buy inventories.

Disinflation or Regimentation

It all adds up to some abatement in demand—not only from consumers, who bought freely, and may have overbought, in the months following Korea, but also from business men who, in a defense economy, don't know where they're going.

The respite from inflation may give Congress time to work on a new tax law, which would siphon off excess purchasing power from consumers and corporations before another round of price raises gets under way. It's a possibility.

However, if fear of scarcity dominates all economic activity, if prices rise in spite of the downward pull of readjustment, then it's hard to see how President Truman and his advisers can avoid re-instituting price and wage regulations similar to those of World War II. The economic consequences would be clear. We'd be in for regimentation of what we buy, how much, and in many cases from whom, for the "duration"—however long that might be.

New York Cotton

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (AP).—Cotton futures closed strong today and regained more than half of the losses recorded on Friday's break. Closing prices were up $1.00 to $4.00 a bale.

The market started lower under carry-over selling from Friday. When this pressure abated trade buying made its appearance and the market responded readily.

Part of the buying was attributed to mills which covered forward sales of cotton goods. In addition there was some reinstating of sold out positions on Friday.

Dealers said the softening of prices late in the week attracted aggressive demand for spot cotton in the South. They also said some of the buying in futures was against export sales.

Storm Serves To Slow Pace Of Trading

NEW YORK, Nov. 25 (AP).—Violent weather helped to cool off buying enthusiasm for stocks today.

After climbing to a 20-year peak for two days running, the market leveled off in lack-luster trading. Demand for radio-television issues livened up dealings a bit but on the whole investors and speculators were inclined to go low and slow.

A slashing rain and wind storm that crippled transportation and communication facilities played a part in deadening the pulse of the market.

WHAT STOCKS DID

	Sat.	Fri.
Advances	315	635
Declines	322	295
Unchanged	280	241
Total issues	917	1171

On Monday and Tuesday prices churned around with no decisive movement one way or another. Coming on top of the market's snappy rise in the preceding week, the pattern was faintly omnious.

On Wednesday the market broke out of its rut with a fast rise. Prices on average hit a 20-year peak and volume approached the 3,000,000-share mark.

On Friday, after the Thanksgiving Day recess, an opening gust of buying pushed prices still higher. Demand cooled off before the day was over but the market closed with a comfortable advance.

Saturday's market did no better than hold the gains scored on the week.

Brokers were inclined to rate as the most important factor affecting the market during the week the hope that an excess profis tax either would be approved by Congress in a very mild form or passed over entirely.

Motors, rails, oils and chemicals were among the better performers during the week.

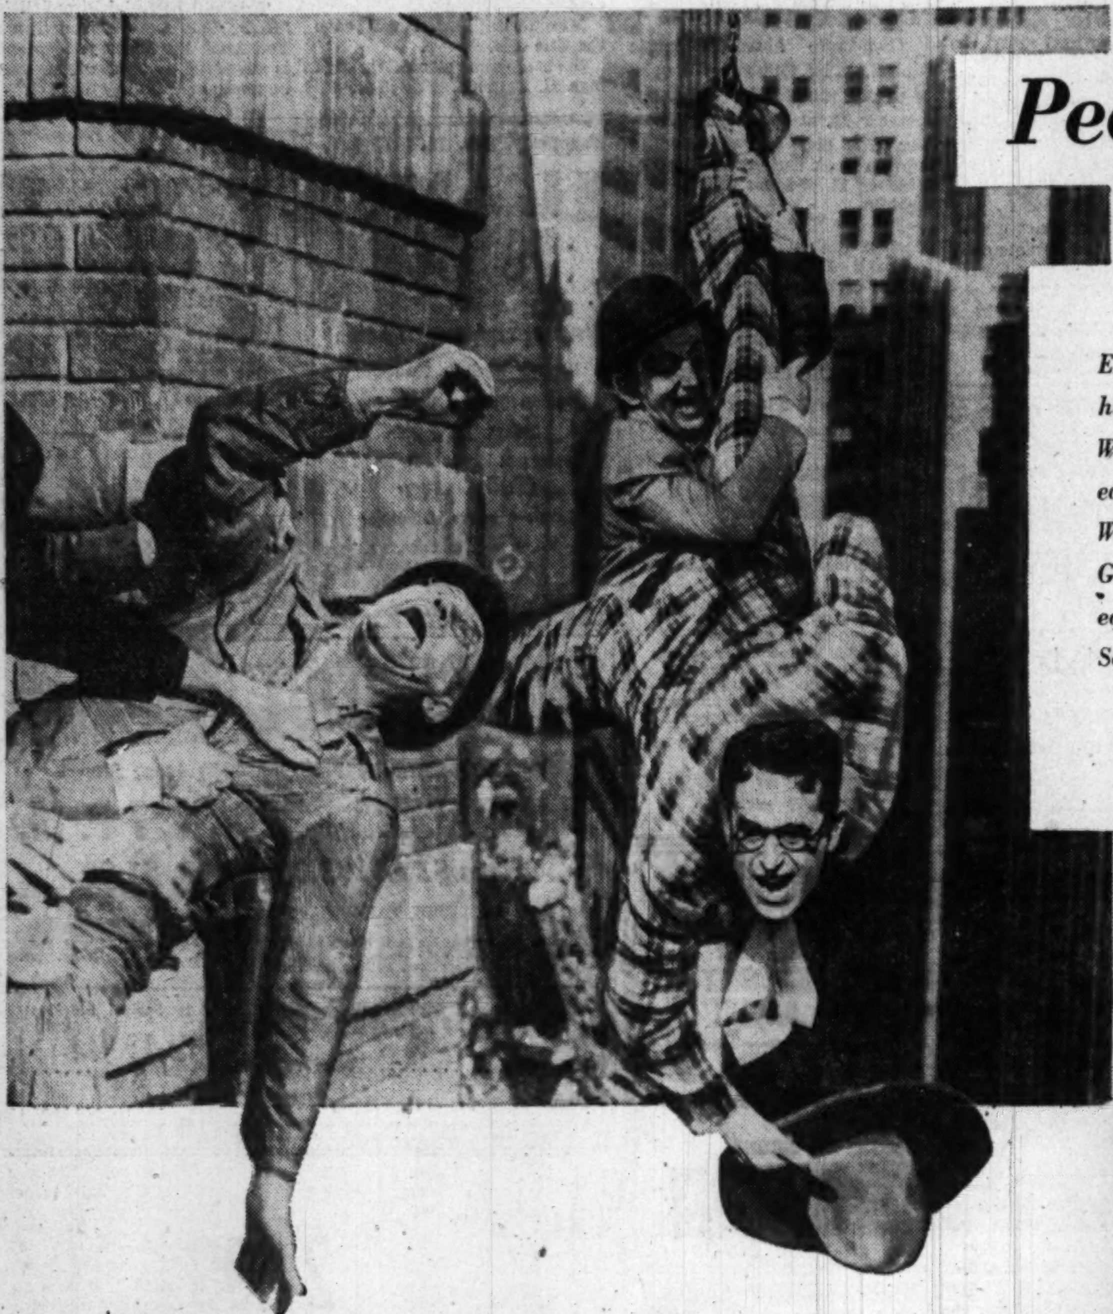
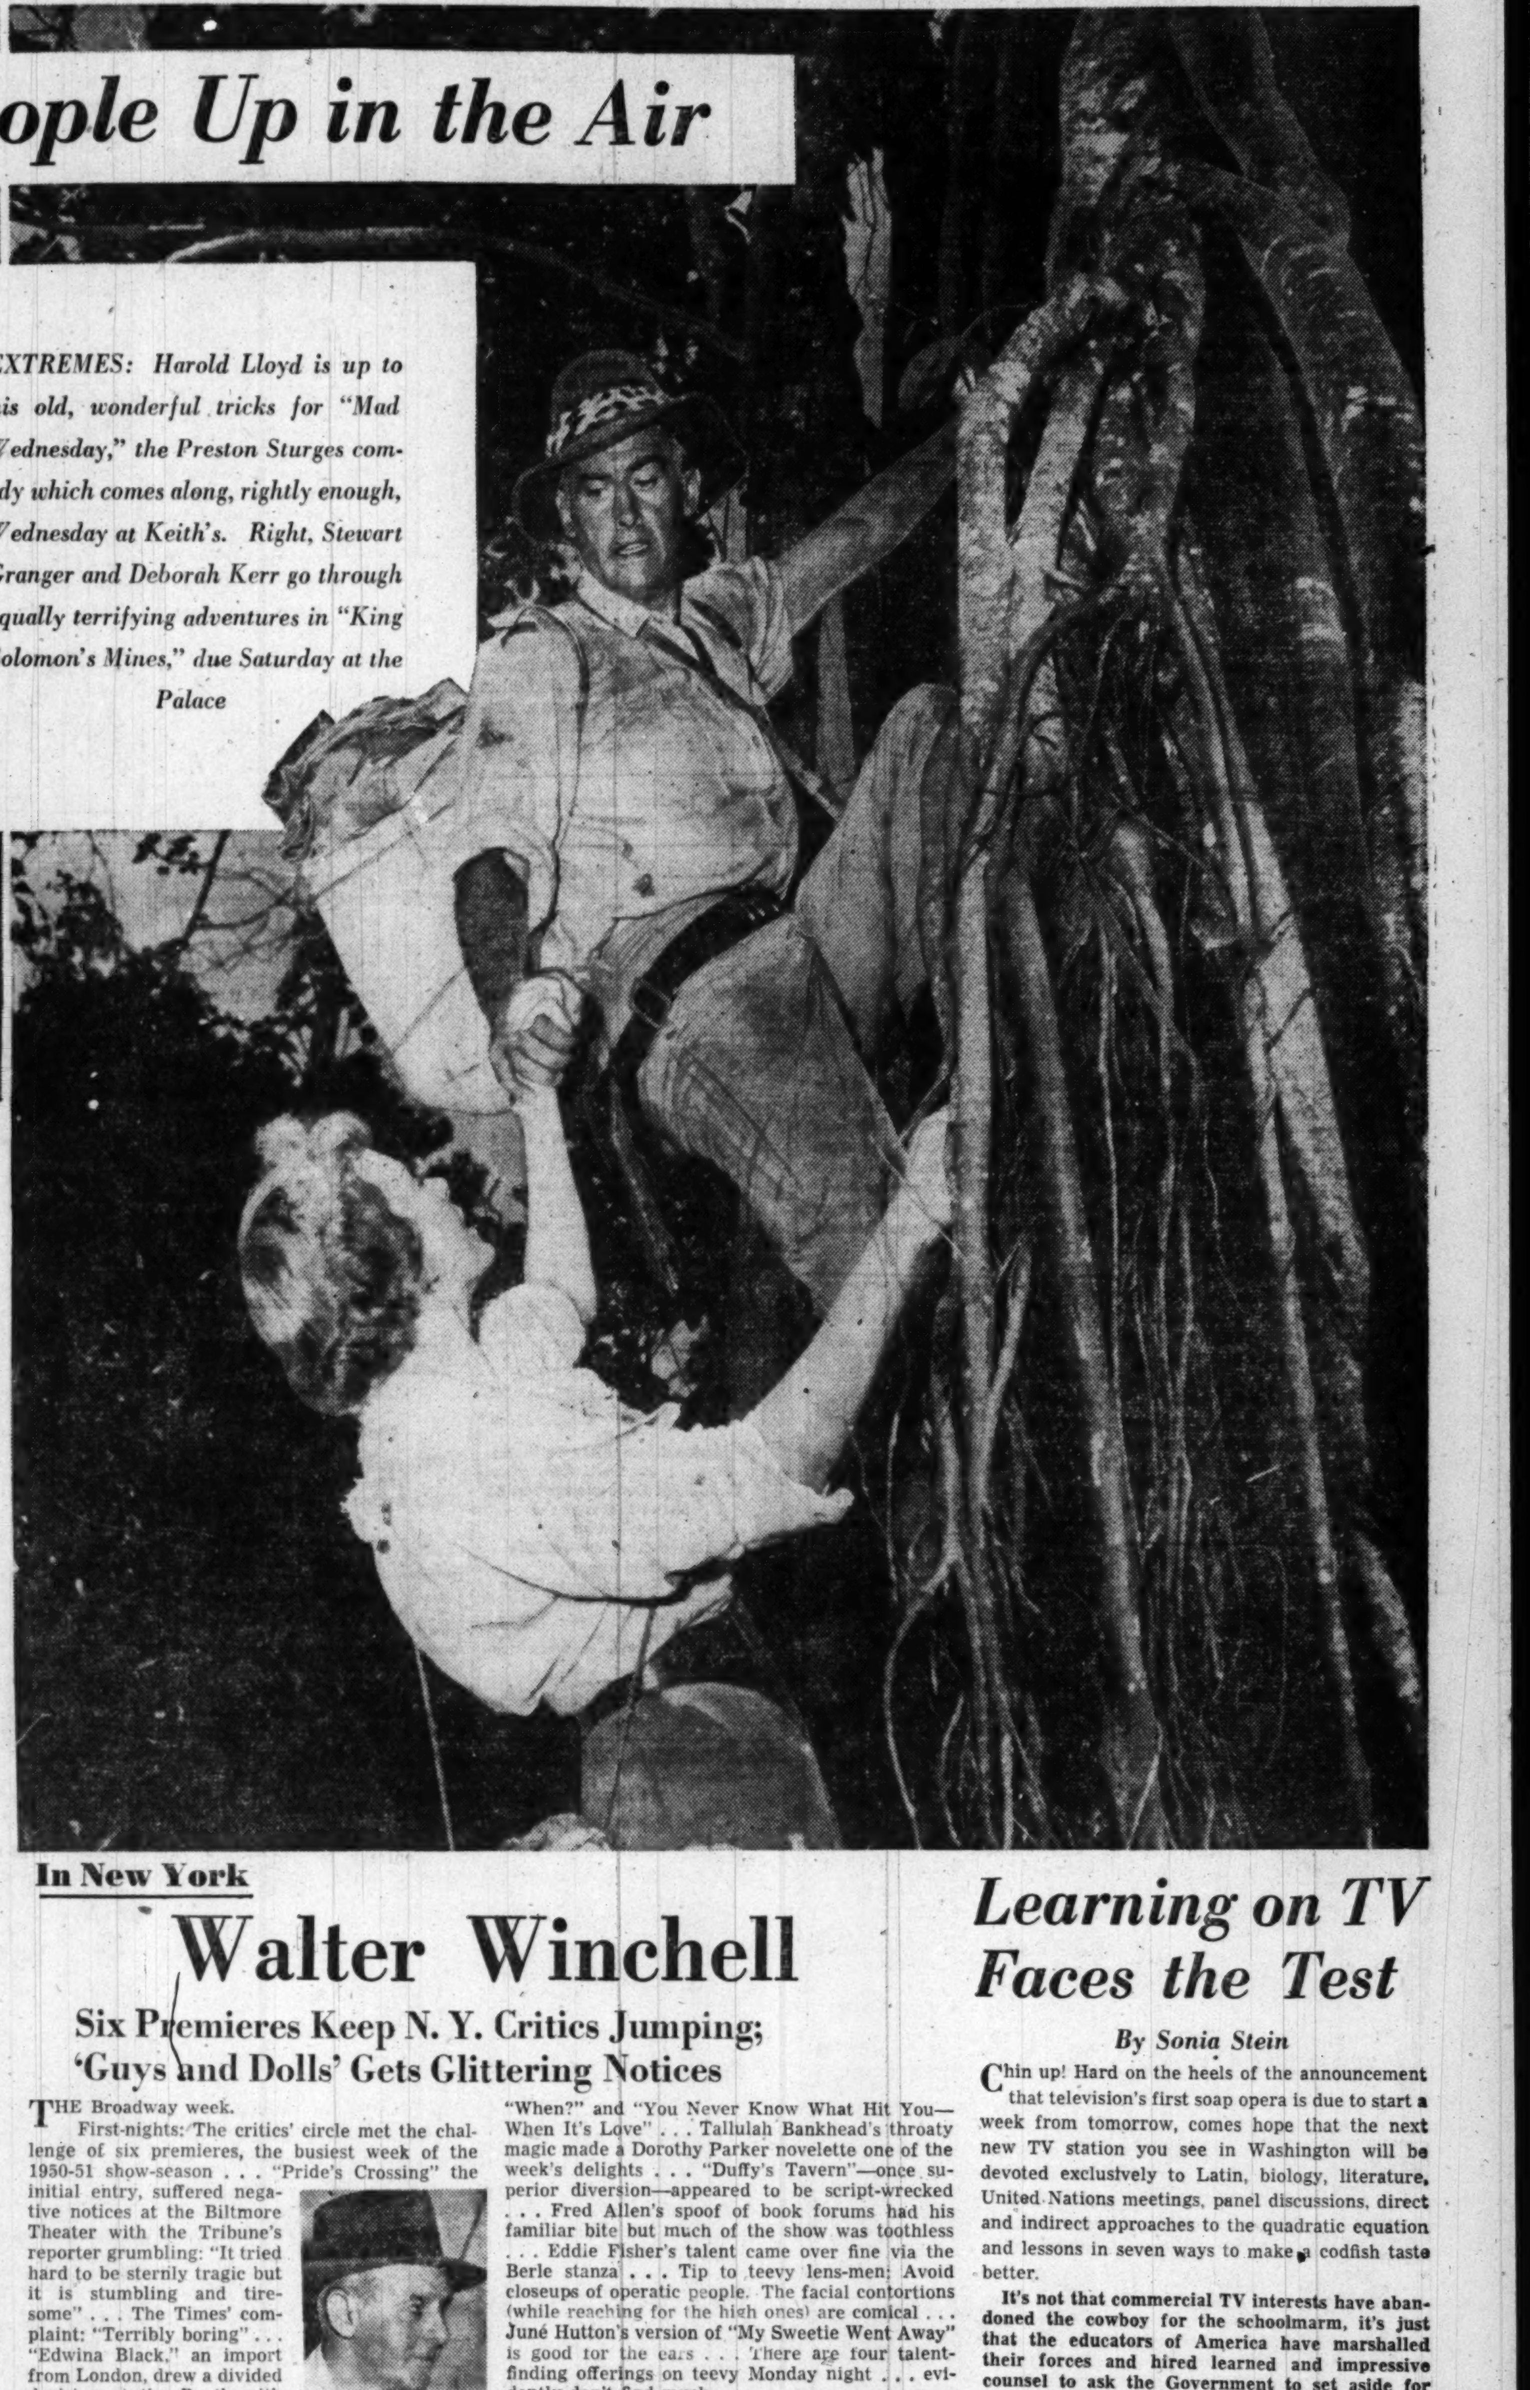
People Up in the Air





EXTREMES: Harold Lloyd is up to his old, wonderful tricks for "Mad Wednesday," the Preston Sturges comedy which comes along, rightly enough, Wednesday at Keith's. Right, Stewart Granger and Deborah Kerr go through equally terrifying adventures in "King Solomon's Mines," due Saturday at the Palace

But How About Those Prices?

They're Still 'Saving Theater'

By Richard L. Coe

BEING OF A sunny, optimistic nature, I'm inclined not to scoff at the formation of one more group determined to "do something about the theater."

This is the Council of the Living Theater, which Robert E. Sherwood is heading and which has been allocated $54,000 by the League of New York Theaters. The aim is to kindle Nation-wide interest in the theater and to observe a year-long bicentennial celebration of the theater in America during 1951.

The number of times a group has been formed to "do something about the theater" in recent years is staggering. Offhand, there's been the Nathan Report, the Bernays Report, the Fact-Finding Committee, the Committee of Theatrical Producers, Actors' Equity, the American National Theater and Academy. True enough, most of these groups are now to work under Sherwood's banner, or so it appears, but the fact remains, for the general public it just sounds like one more set-up.

THE answer, as surely these ladies and gentlemen know, is maddeningly simple.

Prices.

How in thunder's name does the theater expect to win friends by charging the prices it does?

The freak success of shows like "South Pacific" and "Call Me Madam" in New York, where a small, rich group, some of it of the "expense account" set, can afford to do what at least six million other New Yorkers cannot afford, illustrates the ingrown audience of the American theater. Many shows have dropped the $1.20 ticket in favor of a starting rate of $1.80, which goes up to $6 and, in a few instances, to $7.20 and $9.60.

This is all well and good for those who can afford it, but, as Henry Ford conclusively proved, the way to make a fortune is via the mass market of average incomes. And anyone who can afford to sit on the orchestra floor of a New York or road theater is certainly not part of the mass market.

Nor is such a well-heeled group part of the future theatrical audience. Small wonder that a year ago Edward Bernays gloomily pointed out that the theater is disappearing.

AND it certainly can diminish if the needs of most of a potential audience aren't met. Sherwood and his colleagues in this estimable venture could get a microscopic view of why the theater's disappearing in apathy simply by looking at Washington.

During the run of the excellent but nonstarring cast of "Lend an Ear," I observed that the revue wasn't doing too healthily. A flurry of letters informed me that "I'd like to see the show, but the only seats left cost $4.20." That was for the entire orchestra floor of the theater; I dropped by to take a midweek look at the house and it was the orchestra floor that looked barren.

But, at that, because there was no sock star salary to pay, the show left town with good enough profit. Typical of the price range set-up is a minor item without stars or scenery now presuming to charge New Yorkers up to $4.40, Paul Crabtree's "A Story for a Sunday Evening."

"What's wrong," one of my readers asked me, "with cutting the price in half and then selling all the seats? Wouldn't that be better than only selling a handful at the present steep rate?"

With that, I'm inclined to agree, though mention it to the theater people and the reaction is you're either a fool or a madman.

YET, it's certainly true that in Washington, which is a better potential audience than many cities across the land, thanks to regular if small incomes and a large percentage of more highly educated persons, few people can afford to bust a ten dollar bill and pay a sitter a few more dollars for an evening's entertainment.

It simply can't be done and it's highly unrealistic for theater people to expect it.

And by theater people, I mean the whole, wildly overlapping mass associated with the production of a play: the outrageous demands of the numberless unions, the absurd thousands paid the big stars, the quadrupled (since the war) rates of rail and truck transport and all the excessive finances demanded to keep a play running.

These spiralling costs naturally get worse as work becomes less frequent. Large salaries are demanded to tide both players and technicians over between rarer and rarer engagements. Yet, the higher the prices go, the

The Mozart

Washington Trio Hits Top Rung in Music

By Paul Hume

IS THERE a recipe for success in carving out a musical career?

Let me quote from last Monday's New York Times, and the same day's Herald Tribune. First the Tribune:

"The Mozart Trio came to New York yesterday with musical offerings that were as thoroughly delectable as they were unusual, and that they were served up with a modesty appropriately framed within the intimacy of Carnegie Recital Hall. The three singers, Katherine Hansel, John Yard and Joseph Collins, tapped the sadly neglected store of trios Mozart wrote on excerpts from dramatic texts or for unfinished operas or in simple canon or lieder form. There were some duets, too, and one aria.

"The performances were stylish and careful, admirable as to diction and beautifully balanced. It was a delight to be able to hear the weaving of the parts. None of them vied with the other to be heard above the ensemble which is the sort of thing we so often encounter in the opera house."

AND the Times: "The best concerts generally are those in which the spirit of a great composer is most surely evoked. Yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Recital Hall, the Mozart Trio gave such a concert when it presented a program devoted solely to the vocal chamber music of the composer from whom it takes its name.

"The trio has built up its repertoire by research in the Library of Congress, where all of Mozart's works are available. And yesterday's program showed what enterprise can find. Many of the neglected selections were lovely."

Each review continues for more than twice the length we have quoted. Each is signed by one of the leading reviewers on each paper. No debutant recitalist could ask for better notices than Washington's Mozart Trio received.

NOW. Every day someone comes to me and wants to know: "How can I get to the top in music?" Or, "What do I have to do to get some kind of break in giving concerts?"

Several years ago, while music director of a radio station in Washington, I was approached by a member of a

Walter Winchell

Six Premieres Keep N. Y. Critics Jumping; 'Guys and Dolls' Gets Glittering Notices

THE Broadway week.

First-nights: The critics' circle met the challenge of six premieres, the busiest week of the 1950-51 show-season . . . "Pride's Crossing" the initial entry, suffered negative notices at the Biltmore Theater with the Tribune's reporter grumbling: "It tried hard to be sternly tragic but it is stumbling and tiresome" . . . The Times' complaint: "Terribly boring" . . . "Edwina Black," an import from London, drew a divided decision at the Booth with Brooks Atkinson embracing it as "a thoroughly competent murder play" and Howard Barnes listing it as "moderately mystifying," "a hapless melodrama" . . . "The Relapse," the 254-year-old comedy, was rated good frisky fooling . . . Christopher Fry's second play in a fortnight, "Ring 'Round the Moon," was welcomed as worthy Broadway fare and "Guys and Dolls" enjoyed glittering notices . . . The balloting for "The Golden State" began at press time . . . Out of 23 new productions to date only four are established hits with "Black Chiffon" paying its backers 100 percent. in the record time of 5½ weeks.

WINCHELL

THE CINEMAGICIANS: "Never a Dull Moment" starring Irene Dunne, betrays its name and wastes her skill . . . Jimmy Stewart hits the jokepot in "The Jackpot," an amusing travesty on radio quiz programs . . . John Wayne returns in "Rio Grande," a superior cattle-country adventure . . . "Prelude to Fame" (from Britain) and "The Sinners" (from France) have the right passports to entertainment . . . "Two Weeks of Love" presents Jane Powell's lovely voice and legs in a likable musical . . . "Modern Marriage" is a flimsy about Mr. and Mrs. Bore.

IN THE WINGS: "The Glass Menagerie" film which received a so-so critical rating is attracting more money than the widely-acclaimed "All About Eve" . . . Hollywood, which usually pays a hatful just for a famed title, changed Theodore Dreiser's renowned "An American Tragedy" to "A Place in the Sun" . . . Difficult to understand why things are so rugged in England with London's Palladium offering Danny Kaye $240,000 for a dozen weeks . . . George Abbott is the latest show-surgeon to be summoned by Cole Porter's "Out of This World," now in Philly . . . Rose Perfect, the darling of many Broadway hits, opens Tuesday eve'g at Chez Vito in the Maurice on 58th . . . John Alexander, Boris Karloff, Josephine Hull and Jean Adair were the stars in the long run "Arsenic and Old Lace." For the first time since that delight, all four are back in Broadway shows . . . Even the understudies in "South Pacific" get movie breaks. Myron McCormick's understudy, Henry Slate, has gone to the coast for a role in Gary Cooper's next . . . Margaret O'Brien will get $1500 weekly plus 10 p.c. of the profits in "Wild Duck" . . . Not bad for a 14 year old.

THE Airistocrats: The disk jockeys are recommended to Pearl Bailey's show-stoppers in the upcoming "Bless You All" musical. Especially "When?" and "You Never Know What Hit You—When It's Love" . . . Tallulah Bankhead's throaty magic made a Dorothy Parker novelette one of the week's delights . . . "Duffy's Tavern"—once superior diversion—appeared to be script-wrecked . . . Fred Allen's spoof of book forums had his familiar bite but much of the show was toothless . . . Eddie Fisher's talent came over fine via the Berle stanza . . . Tip to teevy lens-men: Avoid closeups of operatic people. The facial contortions (while reaching for the high ones) are comical . . . June Hutton's version of "My Sweetie Went Away" is good for the ears . . . There are four talent-finding offerings on teevy Monday night . . . evidently don't find much.

MOVIE MEMOS: Laurence Oliver's "Hamlet" is now a part of the West Point curriculum. To be shown to sophs annually . . . You probably thought Harpo Marx did his own harp playing. In "A Night in Casablanca" it was dubbed by Robert Maxwell . . . Hollywood moguls are trying to sign Silvana Mangano, whose emoting in "Bitter Rice" is top-flight . . . The film "Harriet Craig" is the third version of the one-time Broadway legit click . . . Town & Country's article on silent screen temptress Pola Negri is more fantastic than the scenario of "Sunset Blvd" . . . Shelley Winters told an interviewer she is weary of sex and tired of dying. Like the Boston matron, she added, who told a Chicago dowager that in Boston they considered breeding important but found time for other things. Louis Jordan, the Negro star, will be interested to learn that in Durham, N. C., his film "Look Out Sister" was advertised: For whites only.

THE PRESS-BOX: From the Houston (Tex.) Press: By staff writer Mary Frazer: "Walter Winchell almost set up a Houston bombshell on his coast to coast Broadcast Sunday night but it fizzled. He said heiress Josephine Abercrombie would wed Fernando Seguro, South American. In no uncertain terms her mother doused the announcement in cold water today. His gossip isn't true" . . . From the AP the next morning: "Josephine Abercrombie, Houston heiress, announced that she will be married to Fernando Segura of Buenos Aires probably next month." . . . From a November 22 society col'm: "The hottest news from London is that the Duke of Argyle wants to make Margaret Sweeney his duchess" . . . From the June 14 WW col'm: "The Duke of Argyle's next wife: Margaret Sweeney, a London beauty" . . . The Daily Worker, the scummunist rag, is daily sniping Al Jolson because he used blackface to sing his mammy songs. "He was," they party-lined: "A Wall Street tool" . . . Doaps . . . General Motors, the front pages excitedly reported, handed stockholders their largest year-end cash dividend in U. S. history . . . Those awful new dealers sure ruined business.

THE Intelligentsia: "To Love and to Honor" (Little, Brown) is Emilie Loring's 30th book. She is in her 80's. Her works have sold over a million copies . . . How history is made: Robert Payne's biog of China's Stalin, "Mao Tse-tung," reports that Mao's negative opinion of American troops is based on scenes Mao saw in a U. S. war movie . . . A cartoon about Quick, the midget mag, which appeared in the September Cosmopolitan became the "property" of Bennett Cerf a month later . . . Robert Montgomery, the star, starts a pillar for Scripps-Howard papers next February.

Learning on TV Faces the Test

By Sonia Stein

Chin up! Hard on the heels of the announcement that television's first soap opera is due to start a week from tomorrow, comes hope that the next new TV station you see in Washington will be devoted exclusively to Latin, biology, literature, United Nations meetings, panel discussions, direct and indirect approaches to the quadratic equation and lessons in seven ways to make a codfish taste better.

It's not that commercial TV interests have abandoned the cowboy for the schoolmarm, it's just that the educators of America have marshalled their forces and hired learned and impressive counsel to ask the Government to set aside for educational purposes at least one channel in every metropolitan area and one in every university center. This would be in the very high frequencies where TV now operates.

In addition, the Joint Committee on Educational Television will ask the Federal Communications Commission (in hearings which begin tomorrow) for 9 channels (which would yield several hundred stations across the country) in the ultra high frequency area in event that appears to be practical for TV service.

The use that would be made of these channels is elastic, and it's possible we may not know what use will be made for several years. But the Joint Committee is most anxious to get these channels reserved even in cities where no educational group is ready financially or otherwise to take on a TV station. The educators know from bitter experience with radio that once the limited channels available are swallowed up by commercial interests it is unfair and futile to wish them back.

(Only five educational organizations, including Ohio State University, have already petitioned for channels: Most colleges are not now sufficiently well-heeled and public school systems are still less so.) The station acquired by Iowa State Col-

Gayety Play Going Into Second Week

WITH JUDY HOLLIDAY in the role that she made her own and which she will soon be playing on the screen, "Born Yesterday" starts its final week tomorrow night at the Gayety.

Miss Holliday, whom you'll recall as Tom Ewell's vengeful wife in "Adam's Rib," plays Billie Dawn, a former chorus girl now the beloved if unmarried pal of a bumptious junkman with Washington ambitions. The setting is a $235 per day suite at a nameless Washington hotel and the characters include a Washington correspondent for the New Republic, a Senator and his wife.

Judson Pratt, Otto Hulett, Larry Oliver, C. L. Burke, William Foran and Dorothy Raymond top the supporting cast. This week the Gayety reverts to its usual Wednesday-Saturday matinee schedule.

Arena to Offer Shaw Comedy After 'Shrew'

Coming up for a two-week run is Shaw's "Pygmalion," with a special Christmas production of "Alice in Wonderland" taking over from December 18 to the first of the year. After that Synge's "The Playboy of the Western World" will be on view, with the players in rehearsal for a first American production of Gerhardt Hauptman's "The Drunkard and the Clown" on January 22. Elmer Rice's "The Adding Machine" is another winter certainty.

Ann Chodoff, Pernell Roberts, Warner Schreiner and Barbara Cole have the leads in the current Shakespearean comedy as directed by Edward Mangum.

In Shaw's "Pygmalion" will be Zelda Fichandler, codirector of the theater, who will stage the comedy as well as play the leading role of Eliza Doolittle. Lester Rawlins, Henry Oliver, Warner Schreiner and Yvonne Kushner will complete the principals.

Arena Stage matinees are Wednesdays and Saturdays.

We've had a lot of previews—but never one with more enthusiastic approval. Just about everybody leaving that show became a volunteer press agent for this M-G-M TECHNICOLOR musical.
People tell us that "TWO WEEKS WITH LOVE" has the sentiment and chuckles of "Father Of The Bride" (they love the scene where Jane Powell gets her first corset), and they predict a new screen find in young Debbie Reynolds, a bundle of life and fire.
2.299 people wrote their opinions on cards—you should read 'em! "Delightful", "beguiling", "for the whole family", "charming"—and other adjectives too flowery even for our own ad writer!

Agriculture Has 3 Dates This Week

Ana Maria . . . appearing with her Spanish Ballet Tuesday evening in Constitution Hall

THE AGRICULTURE Orchestra opens its season tonight and three days later, its chorus presents two nights of Down in the Valley, staged by Stanley Smith and directed by Richard Dirksen.

TOLSON

Ana Maria will present the entire ballet, El Amor Brujo, on Tuesday night in Constitution Hall. This is an unusual event, and one that comes seldom to any city.

The Spanish company conflicts unfortunately with the unusual all-Mozart program at American University. Oh, to be a split personality!

Margaret Tolson, pianist, plays Wednesday evening with the National Symphony.

NEW FACES in Washington music this week include the Degen Quartet Thursday playing for the Georgetown Concert Group, the New Art Wind Quintet Friday in the Congressional Library, and Konrad Wolff, pianist, Saturday in Cafritz Auditorium.

Big news for high school students is the announcement of the Hamilton National Bank Contest being presented for the second year. Full details of this generous plan are available in all public and parochial high schools in the District.

Contests: To stimulate interest in playing orchestral stringed instruments, Nation-wide competitions will be held next March for a three-year scholarship to Peabody Conservatory. The National Federation of Music Clubs is presenting the award. Details from the Peabody.

A COMPETITION for an orchestral work not to exceed ten minutes is announced by the Women's Association of the Baltimore Symphony. Prize appears to be performance by the Baltimore orchestra. Details from Dr. Lubov Keefer, 3818 Tudor Arms avenue, Baltimore.

Students of Washington Music Institute play and sing tonight at 8:30 in the school.

Tomorrow's luncheon meeting of the Washington Music Teacher's Association presents a piano recital by Richard Werder, who will play Bach, Mozart, Brahms and Liszt. The teachers must not hear anything too recent.

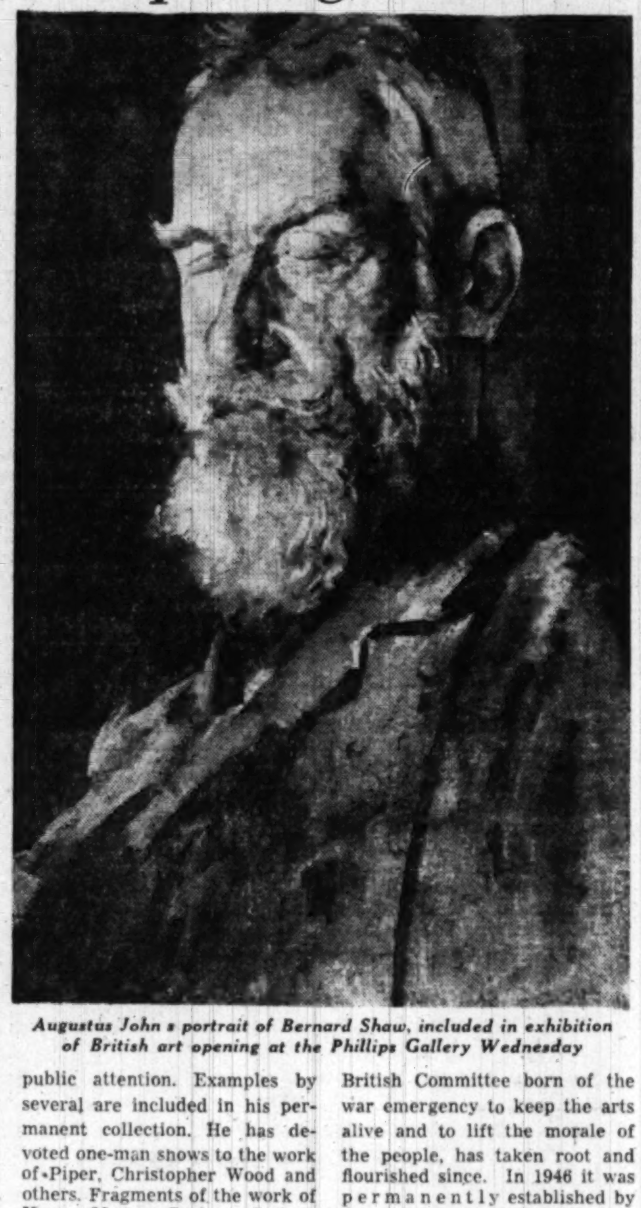
British Show Opening Here

By Jane Watson Crane

THERE IS a great deal of interest in the exhibition of British art sponsored by the English Speaking Union which opens November 29 at the Phillips Gallery. Its godfather is an able and elegant impresario, Sir Kenneth Clark, Director of England's National Gallery and champion of contemporary artists, who has contributed a graceful introduction to the catalogue.

The show represents the antithesis of the academic branch of the British painting tradition. Sir Kenneth, who has been a Whistler devotee for many years, puts most of the responsibility for the currents illustrated in this exhibition on the American expatriate who is often included with the British painters in art literature. We recall some years ago an American Federation of Arts banquet here in Washington when as principal speaker he startled the assemblage with reference to Whistler as our greatest painter. For Whistler was not then the vogue in American art circles and is still not wholly returned to favor.

Be that as it may, there is in this country now a kind of revival of interest in the work of Walter Sickert, one of the earlier painters represented in the present British show, which dates from 1900 to the present. Sickert had qualities of his own so remarkable that they can stand alone without benefit of association. And yet Sickert, also was a great Whistler admirer and is credited by Clark with having been influenced by him.



Augustus John's portrait of Bernard Shaw, included in exhibition of British art opening at the Phillips Gallery Wednesday

ANOTHER GIANT included among the older men is Sir Augustus John, whose portrait of the late Bernard Shaw, lent by the Queen, will rouse poignant and special consideration. In the Capital, Duncan Phillips has done much to bring the work of the younger British artists to public attention. Examples by several are included in his permanent collection. He has devoted one-man shows to the work of Piper, Christopher Wood and others. Fragments of the work of Henry Moore, Graham Sutherland, and other leaders have been exhibited in Washington. American University recently bought a painting by one of the youngest and most brilliant contemporaries, Ben Nicholson.

But by and large, the Washington public is unfamiliar with the development of the contemporary progressive movement in Britain as a whole, and the exhibition offers a rare opportunity to get real insight into what has been going on. The painting illustrated in the current show by notable examples, typifies work that is fresh, imaginative and, to many people, more exciting in its possibilities than the work of any comparable group on the European continent today. This movement does not derive from the French, except as individuals have borrowed ideas for adaptation to their own use. It reveals the practice of theory and experimentation, but not as ends in themselves; the main characteristic is perhaps the opposite, a marked reluctance to depart from the recognizable visual image.

As Sir Kenneth Clark so aptly puts it, "The English mind is encrusted with poetical associations, and to scrape them off in the interests of clear construction is greatly to impoverish it." Most of those who have had even fragmentary glimpses of British painting as exemplified here, would agree that the artists have not "impoverished" it. Quite the opposite.

THE BRITISH must also be responsible for the wave of interest in matters pertaining to government and art which has risen in this country. The star performer in this regard in Philip James, director of the visual arts division of the Arts Council, who has been lecturing at the Metropolitan Museum in New York and will speak at the National Gallery here this afternoon. The British Committee born of the war emergency to keep the arts alive and to lift the morale of the people, has taken root and flourished since. In 1946 it was permanently established by Royal Charter, and according to all reports has thrived on government backing without interference. For the set-up, as has often been pointed out, is nonpolitical, with funds granted over a stated period without regard to changes in government.

The Council from the start has been active in taking works of art to the people in other parts of the United Kingdom apart from the great metropolitan centers. It has had the temerity to give support to living artists through purchase, a form of encouragement based on appreciation and a sense of give and take, which is what any self-respecting artist wants.

We say the British must be responsible for the wave of interest in this matter of government and art. For there is nothing on the horizon here at the moment to rouse more than conjecture, hope or speculation.

Eddie (WTOP) Gallaher ON RECORDS

LET'S TALK MUSIC. The other day I was at a friend's house, and saw a pile of records stacked on top of his phonograph.

"How 'bout a little music?" I suggested.

"Oh, you won't like any of those," he said disdainfully, tossing his head toward the disks. "They're all old."

"Don't be silly," said I. "I like the old ones best."

So he stacked his changer with Hal Kemp's "Love for Sale," Beatrice Lillie's "Paree," Jimmy Dorsey and Bob Eberle's "I Get Along Without You Very Well" and Frances Langford's old Decca record of "Harbor Lights."

As we relaxed, listening to the dusty records, my pal asked me the question which is the favorite "conversation opener" of most of my friends when they see me.

"What's the big hit song these days?"

"Well," I answered, "Harbor Lights" is number one on the Hit Parade."

He was incredulous. I could tell what was going through his mind. He had bought his Frances Langford some 12 years ago, and the fact that the song had become a hit all over again was news to him, so much so that he thought I was kidding him. My friend is a doctor by profession, and has no particular interest in music; but even so, he probably felt it was strange that I should claim that a song was considered the number one hit in the country while he, a reasonably well-informed person, was totally unaware that it had been played in years.

THIS RAISES the question: What is a hit, anyway?

Hits are the lifeblood of anyone having a professional connection with popular music. They are the symbol of success, both from the standpoint of popular acclaim and financial return. No matter how great his artistic achievements, a professional music man who has never had a hit is likely to starve to death.

The definition of a popular hit depends on who's doing the defining. An artist such as Perry Como or Jo Stafford determines a hit primarily by record sales. If Perry happens to record a song which reaches the rare mark of a million copies sold, he is likely to earn as much as $40,000 for the few minutes it took him to make the record, and he knows that he has a hit on his hands.

An orchestra leader playing for the public, such as Bob Grant at the Mayflower Lounge, may judge a hit from the number of people who dance by the bandstand and ask him to play it. A music publisher judges a hit by the number of sheet music copies it sells. A radio conductor, like Ray Bloch, is apt to consider a song a hit if he notes that it is being widely played on the most popular radio shows. And a music store realizes that a new hit has arrived on the scene when school kids who can't read a note of music not only buy the records of the song, but buy the sheet music just so they can learn the words.

DISK JOCKEYS are interested in hits, too. Not only do my friends like to sound me out on what is popular these days, but three national trade papers ask me to supply a list of the 10 top hits in our Washington area each week. I make up my list by adding up the number of Sundial and Moondial requests I receive for each particular song during the week. I do this because it's the only way I know to be impartial.

Actually, though, I don't think any set of statistics, whether it be based on requests or sales or something else, can tell you when a song is a hit. The figures show that "Harbor Lights" is the number one song right now, but I don't believe it.

If you want to know the names of the current hits, don't ask the professional music men with their charts and graphs, ask the average guy on the street. I can tell that "Goodnight, Irene" is a hit because people, like my doctor friend, are acquainted with it. He may be tired of it, but he knows it.

And the next big hit? Well, just as I was leaving the doc's house the other day, he said to me,

"By the way, Eddie, what the hell is The Thing?"

Eddie Gallaher is heard on WTOP every day except Sunday on the Sundial, 7:45 to 9 a. m.; Moondial, 11:30 p. m. to 12:30 a. m.

Artie Shaw . . . plays in Constitution Hall with National Symphony today

Artie Shaw Goes Longhair Today

The National Symphony breaks out its Sunday concerts today, with no less than Artie Shaw to play clarinet music with orchestra.

Shaw's first offering is a concerto written for him by Norman Dello Joio. Second Shaw number will be his own arrangement of three popular songs.

Wednesday night brings one of the finest programs a conductor could dream up. Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, Brigg Fair by Delius—an English rhapsody—Margaret Tolson as soloist in the sparkling concerto of Ravel, and finally Debussy's great seascape, La mer.

Haieff String Quartet To Premiere on Coast

Alexei Haieff's First String Quartet will have its world premiere at the 1951 Ojai Festivals in California next May. One of the 1950 scholarship awards of the Huntington Hartford Foundation in music composition was made to Haieff, currently residing at the American Academy in Rome. It will enable him to write his quartet, commissioned by Ojai Festivals for its fifth annual season.

Recommended by the Juilliard School of Music, this award to Haieff is one of the first musical scholarships granted by the Huntington Hartford Foundation.

GW to Display Lahey Works

IN JANUARY, 1951, George Washington University Library will hold an exhibition of paintings by Richard Lahey, principal of the Corcoran School of Art. Lahey recently had a painting purchased from the Art Student's League Diamond Jubilee exhibition in New York, and is one of the artists of this area whose work was accepted for the Metropolitan Museum national show opening December 8. In December the Library will show paintings and drawings by Atanas Tasev, who was born in Bulgaria but spent 26 years in Czechoslovakia. He came to this country in 1948.

The Watkins Gallery at American University will show drawings by a group of contemporary artists, including Peter Blume, Tchelitchev, Walter Stuempfig, Stephen Green and Leonid, from December 3-22. Also on display will be a one-man show by Ken Noland, a young artist now living in Washington. Noland studied painting with Josef Albers at Black Mountain College and is at present teaching at the Institute of Contemporary Arts, in Washington.

Educators Get 'A' for Effort

lege is temporarily being used for commericial shows since it is the only station in the State and Milton Berle comes first.)

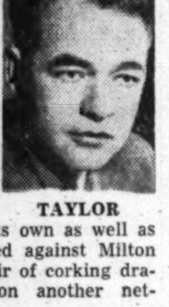
But ready or not with the cash, most educators will have the cunning—some of it borrowed. Educational TV is already a going concern, being conducted part time on commercial stations or closed circuits. And everywhere it's running, it's being tested. Samples of the work will be presented before the FCC in case that body doubts that education goes hand in glove with TV. (Hearings, which are public, will be held in the Department of Commerce Auditorium, starting tomorrow at 10 a. m. and running until 5 p. m., with a break for lunch. Schedule for the ensuing day is announced daily.)

BRIG. GEN. Telford Taylor, former chief prosecutor at the Nuremberg war crimes trials and general counsel for the FCC before that, will represent the educators, but many of them will be on hand to speak their pieces when called. And there is much they can say.

The school systems of Philadelphia and Baltimore have already experimented heavily, through the courtesy of commercial stations which have offered them time. Baltimore, in fact will be holding a second clinic for educators starting December 13, to show how TV can be used. Baltimore has 21 television equipped schools, has taught subjects ranging from airplane design to electric shop instruction. The Baltimore schools even use a "horizontal wipe" to show a teacher at the conference and pupils at a distant point side by side on a single screen.

In Detroit, Mich., the University of Michigan is currently offering a 14-week science course and a seven-week course on "Living in the Later Years." Students who register and pay a fee may take exams and get certificates if they pass. Anybody within sight of a TV set may take the course for free. The university plans to divide its hour a week among the sciences, arts, social problems and "exploration" of the university library and labs.

JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY ought to have much to say at the hearings. Under Lynn Pool, the "Johns Hopkins Science Review" has been skipping along off and on since March, 1948. The university was ready before Baltimore had a station. The show has been on the CBS network and is now on DuMont, Tuesdays at 8:30, holding its own as well as can be expected against Milton Berle and a pair of corking dramatic shows on another network.



TAYLOR

You may get to see all about Schistosomiasis, the deadly disease which is harbored by small snails found in only two places in the United States. One of these places, wouldn't you know, is the turgid Potomac.

Or you may see students going through laboratory-induced fear reactions—and overcoming them. Or you may see what extreme cold does to rubber, or how hemoglobin carries oxygen through the blood stream. Whatever it is you'll SEE it since the show's cardinal rule is "If you can't show it, don't talk about it." That rule helps when you're bucking Berle. The fan mail is delirious with appreciation.

Second rule is to skip mention of education, make mention of the all important YOU. The show may talk in terms of miles per hour but it also talks in terms of how "science will make it possible for YOU to fly to Paris after breakfast, hold a business appointment and be back in Baltimore for lunch."

ALTOGETHER there are 45 universities, 21 school systems and five medical schools using commercial stations to some extent—sometimes just for dramatic shows, but often for more formidable subjects, according to last spring's count by the Federal Radio Education Committee.

And then there's the Office of Naval Research which should have much to say and much to show. Working with the Department of Psychology at Fordham University, the Navy—which has quite a kit and kaboodle of sailors to teach—set up a test of TV teaching, completing over 100 hours of TV instruction as of July 1. Called Project 15-U-2, which sounds like a secret rocket experiment, the tests encouraged the Navy to make written declaration that:

Television is a very capable teaching medium. Under comparable conditions, television is equal to or better than the face-to-face classroom situation . . . The most important reason is that the television instructor, faced with the problem of teaching a much larger, unseen audience spends a greater amount of time in preparation; he further clarifies his thinking in working with the production group in preparing . . . visual (aids). He also knows he is 'on the spot' on television where a great number of critics will see him work and therefore puts that much more into his work.

The Navy also observed—and this may undermine your faith in military rigidity—that the format of each show "must be radically changed to meet the individuality of each instructor, each teaching subject and each student group. It is in this individuality that television has one of its greatest advantages for it plays up instructor individuality and its techniques can be changed rapidly to fit any situation."

DISCOVERY was also made that students remained attentive to the TV screen no matter how dull the presentation—and interest did not fall off even "after the novelty of the medium had exhausted itself" as the Navy expresses it.

The Navy report on Project 15-U-2, although it runs to 58 pages of painstaking detail, admits it has not answered such questions as "how much more effective will the 'best instructor' be over the average instructor," and "to what extent is it practical to spend time and money to have the very best in visual material as opposed to just average?" But it has toted how much the shows cost in money and personnel, and how many film strips, pieces of art work and props went into them.

Naval Reserve officers have also been trained by TV.

The FCC is going to get a glimpse, by film, of a number of the educational shows used around the country. And it's going to get some provocative statements. General Taylor, for one, is going to remind them that day by day in every way TV programs get more and more alike—cowboys, comics, old films, shopping shows—and that educational stations will offer the only different shows.

Hayseed . . . Jim Gibbons of WMAL opens his "country store" tomorrow in front of the Trans-Lux Building on 14th st. The toys, food and necessities he collects between then and Christmas Eve will be distributed to the needy by United Community Services Christmas Bureau rarer the atmosphere is bound to get, to the detriment of all concerned.

Theater Still Costs You

England's actors think the British theater is in a bad state, but at the moment there are some 50-odd plays running in London and there are more touring and actors are working in the provincial "reps." Over there, all costs are a fraction what they are here, but actors work and live on their comparatively modest incomes. Only this year an English star, of the obsolute first rank and used to earning about $400 a week, played New York briefly for several thousand.

It's not easy, I grant you, to urge everyone to take less from the golden goose, once it gets laying, but unless everyone in the theater does this—and I don't for a minute think it will happen—the public for the theater is going to get smaller and smaller and the formation of committees is going to seem sillier and sillier.

I haven't begun to scratch the surface of Washington's importance to the American theater, if only Sherwood and his colleagues would think about it a bit.

One strong effort the producers have made in recent years is to cut down the costs by getting the Federal tax take sliced in half. Last season, for instance, the legitimate theater is figured to have forked over about six million dollars to Uncle Sam in admission taxes and, before Korea, there was high hope that the 20 percent slice would be cut back to the 10 percent of pre-WW II.

Only through Congress can this be done. But do the theater's bigwigs think they are going to make a real dent by sending a few top names to testify before a committee that the theater really means anything in this country?

They were coming to a city which then had no theater at all, and apart from ANTA's ill-fated efforts, no one was seriously doing anything more than gnattering. Yet, they were talking about the theater to the only man who could help them in the city where all spend most of their time, where theater was so little thought of that it took the demise of burlesque to open up a stage. And where, indeed, one of their number had spent $50,000 redecorating a former theater to make it fit for the movies, an investment never approached during the years it had a clear monopoly of the city's plays.

SO—as an aside to Messrs. Sherwood, et al., I'd suggest that if they expect Congressmen to ever do anything about relieving the admission tax, they'd do well to let the lawmakers see the best of theater and theaters at first hand.

And—as a shout to anyone, if any or everyone in the theater really expects to be taken seriously about "restirring interest in the American theater," get those prices down.

Otherwise, save your breath.

The Groucho Show

Rehearsed Ad Lib Requires Writers

By John Crosby

THE GROUCHO MARX television show, "You Bet Your Life," is identical with the Groucho Marx radio show except that television adds the moustache, the cigar, the eyeglasses, the wildly rolling eyes, the ferocious eyebrows and the rest of Marx's dishevelled countenance.

GROUCHO

Groucho is an expert at the use of all these personal props and they contribute a great deal to the humor of the program. There is a certain loss, though. The Marx show originally acquired fame as the quickest and best ad lib operation in the business. It became less and less of a quiz show, which is all right with me, and more and more a gag show. However the ad libs began to sound too round, too firm, too fully packed to be quite ad libs.

TELEVISION has taken this process even farther. "So you're a photographer," Groucho asks a pretty lady contestant. "If you were covering a murder, what would you do first?"

"I'd shoot the corpse."

"That's redundant. What's the next thing you'd do?"

"I'd shoot the witnesses."

"You've shot everyone in sight. Who do you work for, Tripod—a magazine or Murder, Inc?"

As you can see, it sounds a little too practiced, a little too forced, to be quite real. Still Groucho, an expert at milking lines till they're dry as sunbeams, gets more out of that material than you'd believe possible.

"I had a hobby hooking rugs," one girl told him.

She got a long, eloquent look. "You had a hobby hooking rugs?" inquired Groucho. "Where from—department stores?"

"I got so good at it, I started to teach."

This time Groucho put the cigar in operation, twirling it, puffing it, all but swallowing it. "A Fagin—teaching little children to hook rugs."

AND SO ON. Groucho can belt a pun around for minutes at a time without it ever touching the ground. I'm prepared to believe he can do this extemporaneously but I somehow can't quite believe the contestants can handle their straight lines without prior warning.

Of course, the Marx TV show like the radio show, is a rather special operation. It is film recording, which is to say it isn't kinescope. That means it is filmed in front of a studio audience and the filming can go on as long as possible. Then the editors get to work, cutting out the dull spots, and making both Groucho and the contestants appear at their best. They still sound as if they'd been rehearsing.

"You Bet Your Life" is fundamentally a tour de force for Groucho—his moustache, his sliding walk, and his puns—and it's a very funny show—even if they do rehearse those ad libs. Ultimately, I expect, the ad lib show will wind up with four high-priced writers and a full two weeks' rehearsal.

Trial and Error For 'Open House'

THE VACANCY created by departure of Morey Amsterdam from "Broadway Open House" where he has been seen Monday and Wednesday nights (11 p. m., WNBW) is being filled on a trial basis. Tonight and next Monday Mickey Deems and George Connolly will take over. The Wednesday night assignment goes to Wally Cox this week and next. Rumors of Henry Morgan in the spot are deader than dead, alas.

Amsterdam, who went 23 years without a vacation, is now taking one. He's expecting to return in February with his "Silver Swan Cafe" which used to be on WTTG. (TV Week regrets giving Amsterdam the wrong bird last week when we called it "The Golden Goose Cafe."

IRRA PETINA, Met Opera mezzo-soprano costars with Wilbur Evans and Melville Cooper in "The Merry Widow" tonight at 9:30 on WNBW.

WANDA HENDRIX plays Sumatra Balavan, a girl with a love for the sea, in "The Token" tonight at 8 on WTOP-TV. It's a story of clipper ships and shipmen in the 1830's

THE JOE LOUIS-CESAR BRION heavyweight bout at Chicago Stadium will be carried by WTOP-TV tonight at 10. Ted Husing will do the blow-by-blow for the TV audience.

WALT DISNEY has already planned his Christmas Day show, "One Hour in Wonderland," which will be seen at 4 on WNBW. The cast will include Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck, Goofy, Edgar Bergen, Charlie McCarthy, Mortimer Snerd, Bobby Driscoll, Kathryn Beaumont, the Seven Dwarfs, and a group of Disney animators who relax as a jam band, "The Firehouse Five Plus Two." Children of well-known film and radio personalities will also appear.

'Our Town' Gives Actors Rough Work

IT'LL BE AN EASY night on the set-shifters tonight (WMAL-TV, 9) on "Pulitzer Prize Playhouse" but the actors will have a rough time of it. In the presentation of Thornton Wilder's "Our Town" which won the prize in 1938, no scenery will be used since that is the way the original play was staged. This puts the burden squarely on the actors who will be, in this case, Edward Arnold, Elizabeth Patterson, Charles Dingle and Una O'Conner. Arnold plays the "stage manager" who sets the scene in words.

HAYMES ARNOLD

Since this series uses works by Pulitzer Prize-winning authors other than the actual winning material, Thornton could have slipped into the series anyway. He is a three-time Pulitzer Prize winner, having received a 1928 award for his novel, "The Bridge of San Luis Rey" and the 1943 drama award for "The Skin of Our Teeth." "Our Town," incidentally, was runner-up for the Drama Critics' Circle Award.

DICK HAYMES, song writer, singer, film star and radio favorite, just barely makes the "Star of the Family" classification which entitles him to appear as guest tonight at 10 (WTOP-TV) on the Morton Downey show. His mother was a prominent concert singer.

Two-Gun Kroeger Caught in Ohio

TV HITS PEOPLE between the eyes, but not always with deadly accuracy. Ask Berry Kroeger. A quiet, law-abiding radio and TV actor, Kroeger stopped off in Gainesville, Ohio, enroute to New York from a Hollywood movie task. He was "apprehended" in his hotel and hustled off to the local pokey.

KROEGER

Some hours later, Kroeger was released with profuse apologies. It seems a public-spirited local citizen had spotted him at dinner and immediately identified the face with the usual Post Office "wanted" notice. By the time Kroeger was hauled in and offered for further identification, the embarrassed citizen realized he'd associated Kroeger with crime because he'd been a criminal on so many TV shows.

Anyway, the episode gave Kroeger some inside information on how the hunted guys he's played must feel when they hear a loud knock and "Open up, police."

GUNNAR BACK, one of Washington's best known radio voices, makes his debut on TV tonight at midnight. He'll be seen and heard in a new report immediately following the "Ford Film Playhouse." Back is also heard Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. on WMAL in a congressional resume called "Congress Today."

CBS's NEWSCASTER, Douglas Edwards, got an odd but touching evidence of fan loyalty the other day. A dainty pink and blue note with bows and whatnot arrived, to announce the arrival of an 8-pound 7 ounce baby named—Douglas Edward Otto. "A good selection for a name, if I ever heard one. Nice going on CBS-TV!" remarked the baby's papa.

WHEN LARRY ROEMER, co-director of the televrsion of "We, the People," took his little niece to the movies for the first time she was fascinated. "Look, Uncle Larry," she shrieked, "big television."

Sports Help Curb Truancy Among District's Schoolboys

By Elsie Carper

MANY a District schoolboy who was a chronic truant has been reformed because he was given a chance to play on his class touch football or softball team.

Dr. Edwin B. Henderson, head of the department of health, physical education and safety for District Negro schools, has compiled a series of case histories on "problem boys" who changed their attitude toward school by becoming interested in sports.

Dr. Henderson regards the case histories as proof that an experiment started here six years ago is a success.

THE EXPERIMENT was to provide competitive athletics for elementary school-age boys without the evils of inter-school sports.

Dr. Henderson found that fifth and sixth grade boys had little interest in the physical education program taught in the schools.

They wanted to play football and baseball, the sports their older brothers played or their fathers went to see and talked about in the home.

Dr. Henderson noticed that in the afternoons the boys weren't participating in the rhythmic games they learned in schools but were tossing a football around in the alley or playing baseball in the street.

He reasoned that it is the duty of the schools to train children to do well the things they are going to do anyhow.

BUT THE IDEA of competitive sports was frowned upon by most educators.

The main objection was that competition would result in "varsity" sports, the exploitation of children for school victories.

A few players selected for the team would monopolize the playfields and the coaches' time. Physical education programs in which all children could participate would suffer. Pressure on team members to win would result in undue emotional strain upon them and upon teachers and principals.

TO AVOID these potential harmful effects, Dr. Henderson formed a team in each fifth and sixth grade classroom. Every boy was either a player or a substitute. The teams represented their rooms and their grade level rather than their school.

Simple elimination games were played, first in each school, then in each division, then on a city-wide basis until only championship teams in each grade remained. No team played more than four or five games.

Teachers noticed a quickening interest in school by boys who previously had little inclination to come to class.

Surplus energies were directed into team play rather than into hurling rocks through school windows.

BOYS WHO never had excelled in school work suddenly found they were important to the class team. For the first time they received recognition. They felt they belonged to their class and their school.

One youth on the verge of being sent to a reform school settled down to become a good student citizen. Another boy who frequently played truant became pitcher on the class baseball team and attended regularly. Hundreds of such cases reported by teachers appear in Dr. Henderson's files.

In the football series just ended more than 400 boys on 54 teams played in 48 games. Twice as many boys participated in the intra-mural contests before the eliminations began.

This winter the boys will play basketball. In the spring softball games and track and field events will be held.

SUCCESS of the program in the District Negro schools has been due largely to the large number of men teachers in the elementary grades that can be called upon to coach teams.

Men teachers, though, are not essential to success of the program.

Dr. Henderson has found that in many schools women teachers do as good a job of developing athletic teams as men. Sometimes a school will ask a former student now in junior or senior high school to help out by spending a few hours a week with the younger boys teaching them how to pass a football or hold a baseball bat.

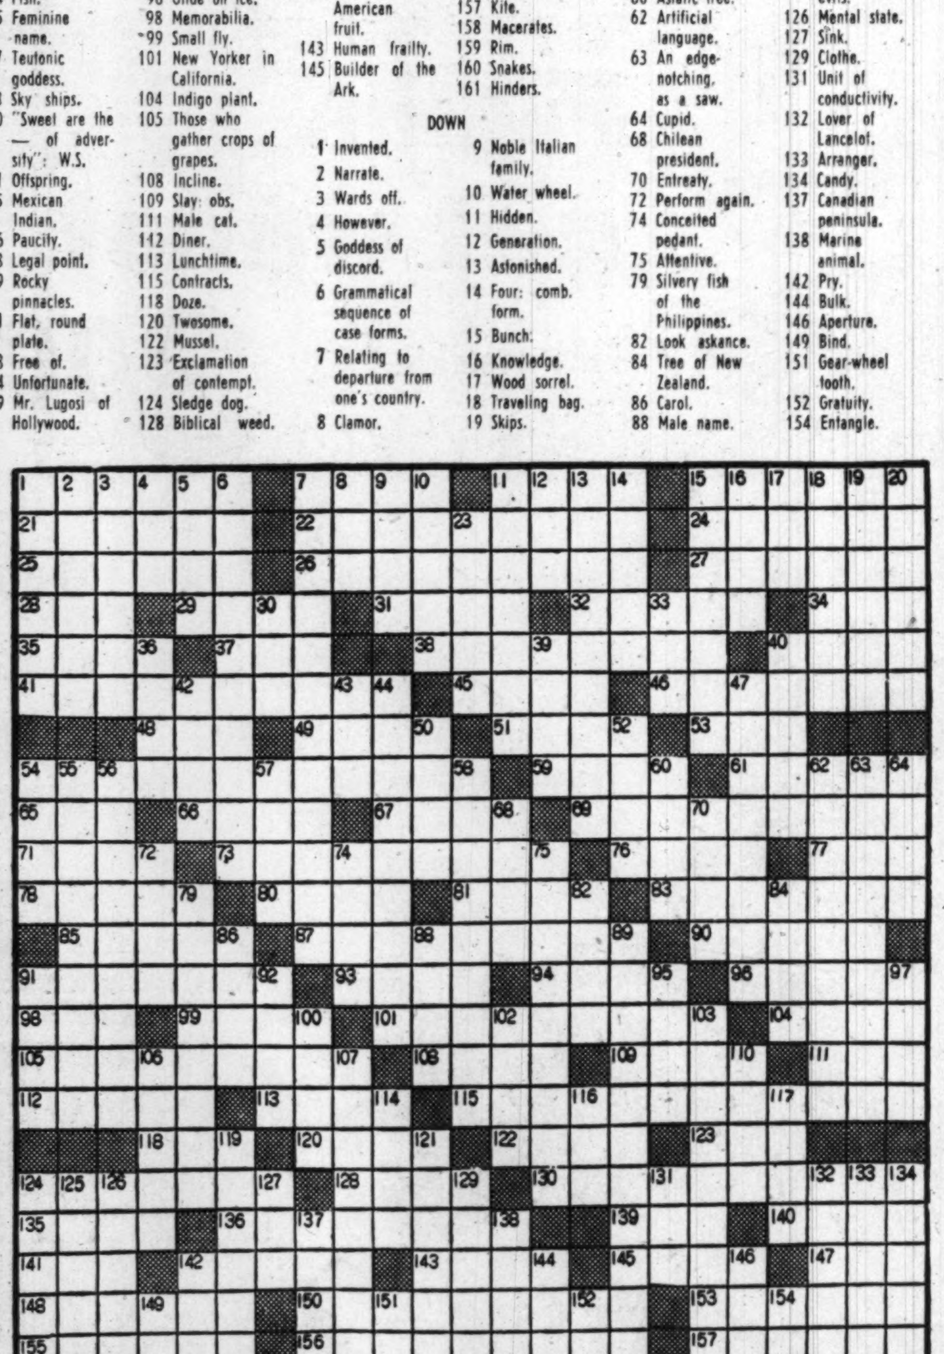
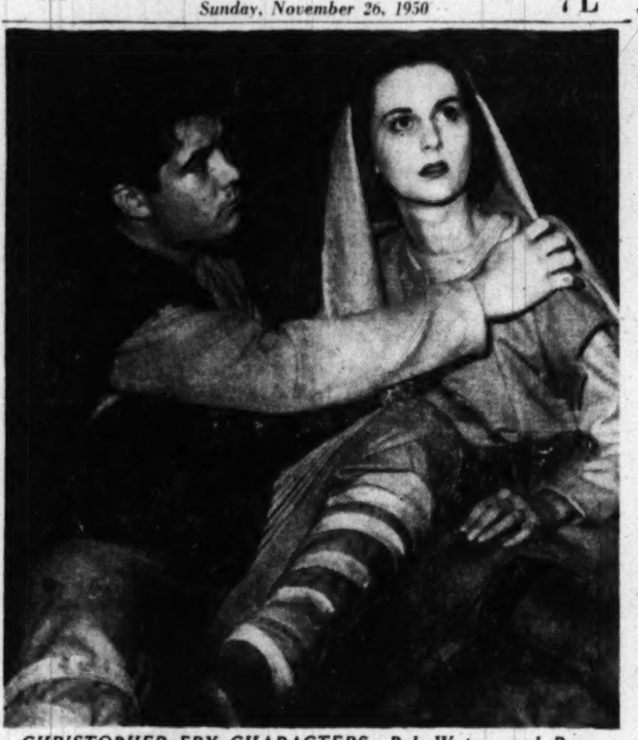
ANSWER TO LAST SUNDAY'S PUZZLE





CHRISTOPHER FRY CHARACTERS: Bob Waters and Rosemary Krill as they appear in Fry's verse drama, "Thor, with Angels," opening Friday night at Catholic University's campus theater

The Record Player

Milstein Fiddle Eloquent; Traubel in Excellent Voice

MOZART: Adagio in E; Rondo in C; also; Glazounoff: Concerto in A Minor. Victor LMX 1064. $4.85. Nathan Milstein, violinist, with RCA Victor Orchestra under Steinberg.

Victor gives feature billing to the Glazounoff concerto. I prefer the Mozart works on the other side, in which Milstein plays with both warmth and proper fire. The Glazounoff is a little cool. Technically, the recording is clear and a model of tone and fidelity.

If you need this familiar concerto, or want the Mozart music, you can't ask for more than this disk.

Helen Traubel in Old Vienna. Soprano with orchestra under Frank Black. RCA Victor LMX 39. $3.85.

For her return to Victor labels, Traubel sings favorite songs of Vienna. If you like English texts you will be happy with Traubel's clear enunciation. I so much prefer the original language, that in these uniquely Viennese lyrics, I find the English a nuisance.

The disk includes the Merry Widow Waltz, Vienna, City of My Dreams, I'm in Love with Vienna, Yours is my Heart Alone, and one or two more. Traubel's voice is at its most beautiful in these songs.

If she misses the spirit of the songs, it may be because she has never been to that city once so full of enchantment for all who traveled there. Years ago Lotte Lehmann did an album like this, and while it is old, and the surfaces probably make more noise than you like, it is still the model for songs of Vienna.

Mozart: Clarinet Concerto. Reginald Kell, clarinet, with Zimbler Sinfonietta. Decca DL 7500. $3.85.

Here is the perfect realization of Mozart's concerto for the instrument he loved so well, once he met it. Kell recorded the music some years ago with the London Philharmonic. That set is now completely outdated by this new version.

The Zimbler Sinfonietta is made up of the best leading players in the strings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. No more need be said. Kell never within my memory has phrased anything with more finesse and polish and at the same time, warm affection than his molding of every line of this great work. The first movement is so wonderful we can only marvel at it.

To hear it surpassed by the unique genius of the slow movement is to add perfection of music to mastery of construction.

Decca has a jewel in the Zimbler people. They have already done a fine piece of Hindemith we will discuss next week.

HUME

women's club that wanted its members to be heard regularly over the air. I asked her what repertoire her members were prepared to present. Her reply has never left my mind, on which it made a shuddering impression.

She said, "Oh, well, you see, the ladies would like to know first if they have a chance of getting on the radio. If they do, then they would all be willing to work up lots of things. But they don't see any point in doing all that work if they aren't ever going to have a chance to do anything with it."

THERE speaks the voice of every lazy would-be performer. And at the opposite end of the artistic world from them stand such musician-artists as the Mozart Trio.

For years, the trio has been building its repertoire. It has had to make changes in personnel, but the gentlemen, Yard and Collins, have never swerved in their plans for presenting the little known vocal works of Mozart, for which they are so unusually gifted.

They are artists who never stop adding to their knowledge and love of music. Only a few months ago, Katharine Hansel brought cheers from the National Gallery audience for her singingof Magda's scene from Menotti's Consul. This very afternoon, Yard will sing Bach arias in All Souls' Unitarian Church.

Each season these singers can be counted on to sing several recitals of broad and uniformly superb music here and in neighboring cities.

Another step to success is to find a branch of music in which not every other artist tries to impress the public. By specializing in fewer fields, and those of great but neglected worth, one can always win an audience and a favorable hearing.

Naturally all this presupposes the technical basis for one's aims. But success is open to those with imagination and hard work.

The Washington Philatelist

New Stamp Series Now Unlikely

By William M. Stuart

POSTAL OFFICIALS are of the opinion there will be no current series of United States postage stamps to replace that of 1938. The program of the Department for 1951 will include a number of commemorative stamps — possibly 10 or 12 denominations—but it is not at all likely the forthcoming program will include a new current series. There are several denominations missing in the current set, therefore a general revision would be of great help to the Department, but the time is not opportune for wholesale revision of the current series, which has served well since 1938.

STUART

Work on the 1951 program is very difficult and philatelists hoping for many new stamps early in the year will be disappointed, for officials are firm in their belief that no general revision is in sight. The three envelope issues just brought out will remain at that figure and new additions will not be released. The public would welcome additional denominations of envelopes, but the Department gives no sign of issuing additional embossed envelope stamps.

With the files of the Department filled with suggestions for new stamps, the staff of the Postmaster General will have a difficult job deciding new issues, unless 30 or 40 new denominations are selected to replace the current series.

THE ANNUAL catalogue, No. 16, of the Tatham Stamp and Coin, Co., Springfeld, Mass., has been issued and is a remarkable volume of about 75 pages. Besides being a price list of stamps, it is filled and running over with all sorts of information a stamp collector should know. The catalogue is worth writing or.

The Canadian postoffice department announces that the new 1950 design 10-cent stamp representing Canada's resources, issued on October 2, is now available overprinted with the letter "G" (government). This release now renders available all denominations of the current issue overprinted with the letter "G."

A total of 16,000 guineas was realized for the 1750 examples of the famous Cape of Good Hope triangular stamps at H. R. Harmer's auction in London. The collection was sold by order of D. Alan Stevenson of Edinburgh, Scotland. The famous "Woodblock" errors sold for 460 pounds.

Sweden's postmaster general states that stamps honoring the new Swedish king, Gustav VI, will be issued in 1951. Stamps bearing the portrait of King Gustav V will be used until the new series is out. Artists are now at work on the designs.

AT THE Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Tuesday evening an auction was held, Ellery Denison acting as auctioneer. At the next meeting at Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw., on Tuesday evening, there will be a quiz program, an exhibition and possibly a speaker for United Nations stamp program.

The Capital Precancel Club will meet tomorrow evening at Weeks Stamp Shop, 1229 New York ave. nw.

J. H. Weimer, 738 Longfellow st. nw., closes bids on his precancel auction sale on November 30. There are 2350 lots listed. This is his twenty-second sale and many rare items are noted.

Philatelic Agency list No. 272 dated November 22 has been issued. The only change from previous lists is the addition of the 3-cent legislative commemorative stamp, the final issue of the 1950 stamp program.

MAPLEWOOD, La.

BY TYING himself to a tree by his tail, this young Brahma bull not only surprised himself but surprised farmers who came upon him in a moss-hung thicket near here. How did he do it?

Farmers decided he did it in three stages. (1) He flicked his tail at a fly. (2) The tuft on the end of his tail snagged on a piece of rough bark. (3) He wheeled around the tree, tying himself up tighter. A sailor couldn't tie a better hitch!

Tree snaps and bull departs. Tail finally unwrapped.

PATRICIA STEVENS: a broken neck was her break . . .

I Can Do Anything!

She found a fortune a year in a plaster cast

BREAKING one's neck is not ordinarily among the best ways to achieve success, but in Patricia Stevens' case it worked!

Miss Stevens, now 35, is a cosmetics tycoon and owner of a string of modeling schools in 11 U.S. cities.

"Breaking my neck," she says, "was the best break I ever had."

Born near Sioux Falls, S.D., one of a carpenter's six children, she had two assets to start with: pluck and freckled beauty.

Her pluck showed up when she graduated from business school in 1931, couldn't find a job in Sioux Falls, and hunted one down in Chicago at the munificent salary of $12 a week.

Pluck and beauty got her to New York and a job as a Powers model. She became well-known almost overnight as a long-legged dreamgirl in bathing suit ads.

After that came a part in an Al Jolson show and an offer from Hollywood.

Auto Crash Changed Her Career

She was on her way to take a screen test when she stopped off in Chicago to see her mother, got in an automobile accident, and wound up in a plaster cast. Hollywood was out.

During the whole year she spent in the cast, co-eds at nearby Northwestern University got in the habit of dropping around to the hospital to ask her advice on becoming models. By the time she was well, she had an idea!

Borrowing a desk and renting an office, she started a model school that now takes up almost half a city block on the corner of Chicago's State and Madison Streets. Here, and in her 10 other schools, Patricia teaches modeling, dramatics, and television acting to 2,000 girls a year. With her cosmetics line, she is reported to gross $500,000 a year. She's glad she broke that neck!

Popcorn at the movies

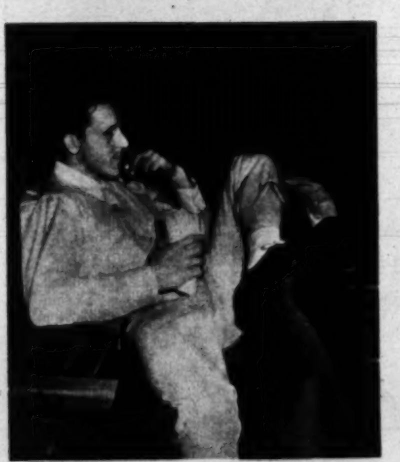
EVER EAT popcorn in the movies? Yes? Well, here is how you look to a candid camera equipped with infra-red film that can see you munching away in the dark.

According to the owner of the State Theater, in Boonton, N. J., where these pictures were taken, approximately one out of every six moviegoers is a popcorn addict.

Parents who take children buy the most. Parents who don't bring children (but take popcorn home to them) are second. Unaccompanied children (at Saturday matinees) are third. Childless couples are fourth, and "dates" eat least.

Nationally, it adds up to $250,000,000 worth a year, or at 10¢ a bag, 2,500,000,000 bags. Do the movies mind? Nope. State Theater owner Edward Lachman figures profit averages 5½¢ to 8¢ per patron, more than he makes on some pictures.

SMILING popcorn eaters munching popcorn are manager's happiest sight.



LOUNGING-style is fine, if foot does not annoy popcorn-eaters in front.

ONE-armed popcorn eater is dangerous. Elbow swings for each mouthful.

NERVOUS Roy Rogers fan eats in rhythm to hoofbeats of horse, Trigger.

BAG apiece is sign of hardened popcorn eaters. They take more home.

THOUGHTFUL type munches slowly as screen hero and heroine are caught in tight spot. Theatermen prefer light comedies, which seem to whet customers' appetites.

SATURDAY matinee crowd considers popcorn part of show. Recent technical improvement is a special non-rustling bag. It has holes, so a kid can't pop it.

NO matter who makes 'em, pancakes are really "made" by rich, delicious KARO® Syrup! For three generations it has been America's favorite syrup... for pancakes, waffles, French toast, biscuits. There are 3 kinds of Karo Syrup

- Red Label KARO is crystal clear (Light)... mild, sweet, delicate!
- Blue Label KARO (Dark)... rich, zesty, satisfying!
- Green Label KARO (Maple-y)... with tangy flavor!

YOU WILL SURVIVE the BOMB!

... unless you are almost directly hit:

IN DEVIL'S HEAD, COLO., last month, a self-styled mystic who calls himself "the supreme voice of the Brotherhood of the White Temple" led his followers into a hidden mountain valley.

"Here," he told them, "is where we will come on the day of the great atomic Armageddon."

A couple of days later in St. Louis, a man offered civil defense authorities the use of 17 Shetland ponies. Then an undertaker designed a pony-powered ambulance for the evacuation of casualties in the event of atomic attack.

Meanwhile, in Bethesda, Md., an inventor announced a new shield against atomic radiation: pajamas cut from sheet aluminum!

In this manner, with varying degrees of foresight and fatalism, the U. S. people this fall faced the possibility of sudden atomic attack on their cities. To most of them the lurid prospect of a mushroom cloud rising over American roofs has become a thing of fear.

Lately, U. S. civil defense chiefs have recognized that fear alone could cost as many lives in an atomic attack as blast or burn. To fight this fear they have issued a 32-page booklet called Survival Under Atomic Attack, "John Citizen's Handbook on Atomic Attack Protection." Its purpose: to take fear out of the bomb – and to substitute an understanding of just what the bomb will–and will not–do.

● So important do the editors of PARADE believe this booklet to be that they have arranged to reprint it for PARADE readers. (See coupon at right.)

Survival Under Atomic Attack rids the U. S. mind of myths which have hovered about the atomic bomb since Hiroshima.

▶ In the first place, it points out, atomic bombs will NOT destroy the earth!

Fear that all of us are eventually doomed by the bomb is responsible for a wave of listless disinterest that has hampered civil defense planning in some areas. Yet this fear is entirely unfounded.

"Atomic weapons," says the government booklet, "hold more death and destruction than man ever before has wrapped in a single package, but their over-all power has very definite limits. Not even hydrogen bombs will blow the earth apart or kill us all by radioactivity."

▶ And remember this: Cities are not doomed!

For months now, some Americans have been moving out of cities and seeking asylum in rural communities. Industry is talking of moving underground. In mountain retreats speculators are offering caves for rent. Some bank depositors have hidden their funds in country strong boxes.

Frightening? Of course. But listen to what the government's booklet has to say:

"Should you happen to be right under the bomb, there is practically no hope of living through it . . . On the other hand . . . from one-half to one mile away you have a 50-50 chance. From one to one and one-half miles out, the odds that you will be killed are only 15 in 100. And at points from one and one-half to two miles away, deaths drop to only two or three out of 100. Beyond two miles the explosion will cause practically no deaths at all."

In other words, you don't have to move to the country in order to survive the bomb.

▶ What about bomb shelters? A great myth has grown about them and Americans, always quick to embrace a fad, are now as enthusiastic about shelters as they once were about bubble-gum. In New York, a draftsman advertised

Don't run from the bomb . . . you can conquer it at home

IN MONTANA, a New Yorker built an A-bomb haven, then moved in.

IN CAVES, explorers seek hide-outs. But U.S. believes we will survive bomb in our own homes.

IN "MAGIC CIRCLE," economist Walter Bowers says Americans have best chance of survival. He is on staff of "Utopia" college in Eureka, Kan., in mid-continent zone.

CHICAGO scientist tests air for radiation. City may use mobile laboratories if bomb is dropped. Residents are urged to think of protection, not escape.

a new book tells you why

BY FRANK DE BLOIS

shelter plans for sale—and was swamped with orders. A shelter-conscious Boston truck driver, asked what he would do if a bomb fell, replied: "I'd run like hell for the subway!" A Canadian widow spent her life savings on a back-yard shelter. And in Fort Wayne, Ind., a man spends his week-ends chiseling a shelter out of a rock formation in an empty lot.

Important as good shelters are, in many cases you are quite safe in your own cellar. More important than an elaborate shelter, says Survival Under Atomic Attack, is this simple advice:

"Even if you have only a second's warning, there is one important thing you can do to lessen your chances of injury by blast: Fall flat on your face!"

The Two Great Myths

FINALLY, the booklet explodes the two great myths about radiation.

▶ Radioactivity is NOT the bomb's greatest threat!

In most atom raids, blast and heat are by far the greatest dangers that people must face. Radioactivity alone would account for only a small percentage of all deaths except in underground or underwater explosions.

▶ Radiation sickness is not always fatal!

In small amounts, radioactivity is seldom harmful. Even following a heavy dosage, there is a good chance of recovery.

How to Protect Your Home

IN ADDITION, the booklet lists precautions to take against radioactivity in the home and in the family automobile, and lists these five keys to your household safety:

1. Strive for fireproof housekeeping. Don't let trash pile up; keep waste paper in covered containers. When an alert sounds, shut off the furnace.
2. Know your own home. Find out the safest part of your cellar. Learn how to turn off the master switch.
3. Keep emergency supplies handy. Always have a good flashlight, a radio, first-aid equipment and a supply of canned goods in the house.
4. In a raid, close all windows. When an alert sounds, shut windows and doors and draw the blinds. Keep the house closed until all danger is past. In this way you'll keep out sparks and radioactive dust.
5. Don't use the telephone unless it is absolutely necessary. Leave the lines clear for emergency traffic.

Keep your head, the booklet warns, and memorize these rules. Then – the chances are great that even if a bomb should hit your town – you will survive!

What can a Dentifrice promise?

Squibb gives you facts!

1. It Shouldn't Promise Miracles. You see, many things cause tooth decay... eating wrong foods especially during childhood, illness, infections, metabolic defects, and acids that form in your mouth after you eat. That last cause is the only cause that any non-prescription dentifrice can help combat.

2. It Can Offer Help if Used After Every Meal. Bacteria in your mouth turn food particles into dangerous acid. Squibb Dental Cream helps neutralize acids with magnesium hydrate... helps make them harmless.

3. It Should Say "Here's the Best Way to Fight Decay." Use a reliable dentifrice after every meal when acid formation is at its peak. See your dentist twice a year for a thorough cleaning and check-up. Take his advice for between-visit tooth care. He's still your best protection against needless worry, pain, expense.

NO OTHER DENTIFRICE CAN HELP neutralize acid more effectively clean the teeth with safety more thoroughly give you a cleaner, fresher mouth and breath... than reliable Squibb Dental Cream

... AND MAKE SURE YOU REACH THOSE HARD-TO-GET-AT PLACES by using the Squibb Angle Toothbrush... bent like a dentist's mirror. It makes thorough brushing surprisingly easy.

Fingernail inspection: women calmly hold hands flat; men worriedly clench fists.

A girl's never wrong ... just different!

PITCHING: women keep elbow down, push ball. Men wind up.

SWEATERS: women grasp bottom, peel it off. Men pull the shoulders.

How do you strike a match? Pick up a book? Put on a glove? It may depend on your sex.

Observant news and magazine photographer Leo Fuchs, who has taken pictures of thousands of men and women, claims that if you watch them closely, they do many little things differently. To prove his point, he spent a whole day photographing ad models Caren Preiss and Stan Robins doing some everyday things.

Besides those shown here, he claims men differ (1) in threading a needle (a man approaches the thread with the needle), (2) carrying books (a woman cuddles them in the crook of her arm), and (3) putting out candles. Women blow them, men try to pinch the wick.

So says Fuchs. Now, what do YOU think?

RELAXING: most women like to curl up, using their knees as support to rest arm muscles. Men sprawl on end of their spines, taking weight off feet.

STRIKING MATCHES: do women usually light them by scratching them away from body? Photographer Fuchs claims they do. Men, he says, do opposite.

GLOVES: Lovely Lady puts them on holding hand up, carefully working fingers on first. Careless Man yanks them on by cuff, takes them off the same way.

MAYBE IT'S SOMETHING HE DIDN'T EAT!

Don't be simple, Simon! Do something about that dull, listless feeling if it's caused by irregularity due to lack of bulk in your diet. Try the "ounce of prevention" in a serving of Post's 40% Bran Flakes. It's the cereal that gives you the three extra keep-fit benefits:

(1) bran to help prevent irregularity due to lack of bulk in the diet
(2) whole-wheat values of these essential B vitamins: thiamine and niacin
(3) good source of these important minerals: phosphorus and iron

And you couldn't ask for a better tasting cereal for breakfast. It's fresh, golden-toasted goodness really hits the spot. Ask for Post's Bran Flakes, America's largest selling bran flakes . . . today!

'Family Star'

AT 21, Miss Jean Simmons is Britain's Number One movie star. The reason? In England, the whole family loves her.

A Simmons movie has become the guarantee of a successful English family night out. Father and Mother approve of her lack of affectation. Their daughters want to grow as much like Jean as possible. Their sons want to marry girls like Jean.

"She is the sort of girl you meet in real life," Englishmen say.

Today, still unconcerned with bright lights or glamor, Jean Simmons retains the same happy personality that caused her to be picked from over 100 girls in an audition for her first movie role. A pupil at a London dance school, she landed a child's role in a movie. She was 13 at the time.

Most celebrated for her portrayal of the stormy Estella in "Great Expectations," and of Ophelia in "Hamlet," Jean has also tried the legitimate stage. Last year she toured in Tolstoy's "Power of Darkness." The play was a flop but Jean, whose performance was better, considered it good experience. Her greatest ambition is to play Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet."

Will She Stay Sweet?

JEAN is the youngest daughter of a school teacher who never lived to see her rise to fame. Her family live in the same small London house where she was raised, but Jean has her own apartment.

Her engagement to Stewart Granger, British actor, was announced some time ago. Today she is beginning to think of a Hollywood future. The question: will she retain the same sweet simplicity that has made her a box-office first? ★★

CHEERFUL GRIN is a Simmons' trademark: her British fans admire her for her naturalness, lack of "glamor."

MICHAEL RENNIE gives Jean a whirl on the set of "Trio" (Paramount). They play lovers doomed to die.

Everybody loves movie actress Jean Simmons!

At the first sign of a cold—before you do anything else—you should take BAYER ASPIRIN, because BAYER ASPIRIN brings you quick relief from the headachy, feverish feeling—and the muscular aches and pains—that usually accompany a cold.

Ask your doctor about this. We're sure he will tell you that no matter what you do to try stopping or shortening a cold, it's sound advice.

And it's advice that produces fast results. For BAYER ASPIRIN is actually ready to go to work in two seconds. That's one reason why, when you take it to relieve these distressing cold symptoms, you get the relief you want with astonishing speed.

By dropping a BAYER ASPIRIN tablet in a glass of water and watching how quickly it disintegrates, you can see this two second speed with your own eyes.

WHAT TO DO FOR SORE THROAT

BAYER ASPIRIN is also an excellent medication for the relief of sore throats due to colds. You just dissolve three BAYER ASPIRIN tablets in one-third of a glass of water—and then gargle. This makes a potent medicinal gargle that almost instantly soothes tender throat membranes, relieves pain and irritation.

You'll find that BAYER ASPIRIN is not only highly effective, but wonderfully gentle, too. Its single active ingredient is so gentle to the system doctors regularly prescribe it even for small children.

WHEN SLEEP WON'T COME AND YOU FEEL GLUM

Use Chewing-Gum Laxative—REMOVES WASTE... NOT GOOD FOOD

● When you can't sleep—feel just awful because you need a laxative—do as MILLIONS do—chew FEEN-A-MINT.

FEEN-A-MINT is wonderfully different! Doctors say many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon ... right in the stomach. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy ... you feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that weak, tired feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel fine, full of life! 25¢, 50¢, or only 10¢

GINGER ROGERS: The golfer's question was a dilly . . .

Down the fairway

Or, practically anything can happen on the green...

GINGER ROGERS, one of the top ranking tennis players in Hollywood, is also quite adept at golf. Traipsing cheerily around a course near Las Vegas, a well-known producer asked if she'd mind his playing along. "I'm a natural at this game," he said, "so please, don't give me any advice–just ignore me." His companion shrugged assent. Coming to the tee, the caddy handed the producer a driver.

● "I thought I just told you," he scolded, "I don't need suggestions; here, take this club and give me a putter." The lad raised his eyebrows and did as told. Swinging furiously, the cocky amateur whacked the ball straight down the fairway and rimmed the cup. On the green, the caddy held out the putter. Again the producer started to shout. "How many times do I have to tell you I don't need your help; here, take back this club and give me the driver." Spreading his legs apart and smiling confidently, the producer lashed at the ball, missed it, and grimaced as the breeze caused the pellet to plunk into the cup.

● "Now, Ginger," he said resignedly, "I do need your help. Tell me, what club do I use to knock the ball out of this hole?" . . .

These delicious, glazed Oatmeal Nut Bars are really different, a perfect accompaniment for afternoon tea.

Oatmeal Nut Bars

By Beth Merriman,

PARADE'S FOOD EDITOR

HERE is a new confection that is not a cake nor a cookie, but which combines the best features of both. Children will love these Oatmeal Nut Bars, and grown-ups will find them a perfect accompaniment for afternoon tea, because they can be eaten with the fingers and are not too sweet.

Mothers who are mailing boxes of food to children in school or to sons in the service will like this recipe because it is a good traveler. Wrap it, without cutting into bars, in aluminum foil or waxed paper to mail.

Oatmeal Nut Bars

1 cup sifted enriched flour	⅓ cup milk
¼ teaspoon baking soda	½ teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon salt	1 cup quick rolled oats, uncooked
⅓ cup shortening, soft	½ cup chopped walnuts
⅔ cup brown sugar
1 egg

½ cup moist-pack shredded coconut

Mix and sift flour, baking soda and salt into bowl; add shortening, sugar, egg, milk and vanilla. Beat until smooth, about 2 minutes. Blend in rolled oats, nutmeats and coconut; spread in greased 11 x 7-inch baking pan; bake in moderate oven (350°F.) 25 to 30 minutes. Remove from oven and pour hot orange glaze over the top. Cool; cut into 12 bars.

Orange Glaze

½ cup sugar	1 teaspoon grated orange rind
3 tablespoons orange juice

Combine sugar and orange juice in saucepan. Bring to boil; boil 3 minutes; add grated orange rind.

SET of single capacity measuring cups makes it easy to measure shortening. Here a ⅓ cup measure is used.

ALL the ingredients are mixed in one bowl. Rolled oats, chopped walnuts and coconut are added last.

AS SOON as pan is removed from oven, pour hot orange glaze over the surface. Cool, cut into bars.

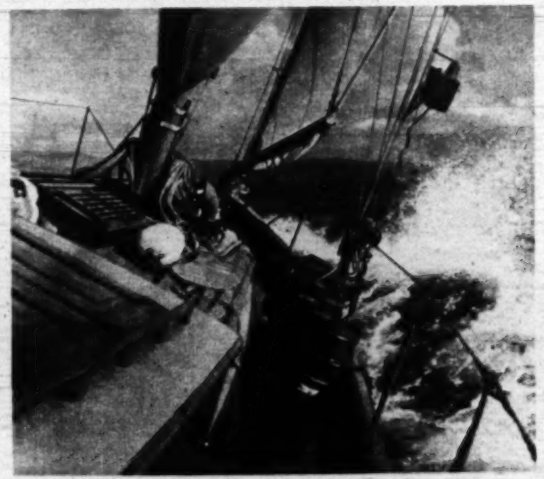
As the cold seas of the Atlantic surge about them, two sailors hold their boat on its course — due South!

Course: Due South!

A yachtsman-photographer takes you south to the Caribbean



WHEN the breeze comes fresh, you need a steady hand at the helm, and a sharp eye for the weather.

Sailing, says author-photographer Carleton Mitchell, is a good many things. It's drifting into a cove at sunset —or lying in a bunk and listening to the wind whine through the rigging. And, right now, to hundreds of sportsmen, it means heading south through winter seas to the green waters of the Caribbean. Look at these pictures (from Mitchell's book *Yachtsman's Camera) and see what winter sailing can be like.

Until—at last—waves subside and sun sets across still Caribbean lagoon.

'Mouse City'

'Urban mice' aid study of mankind

BAR HARBOR, Me.

HOW MUCH can men learn from mice? Some day – in one doctor's opinion – we may learn a great deal!

Dr. John C. Calhoun has spent a year observing mice awake and asleep, at work and at play, in "Mouse City." This is a research project he has set up in the Jackson Memorial Laboratory here. And although he makes no comparison between man and mouse, he has found that under certain conditions the behavior of mice gives him an idea of what to expect from mortals.

Whether you do or don't live in an apartment house you should be interested in Dr. Calhoun's experiments. At "Mouse City" he built apartments for families of both aggressive and non-aggressive mice. Then he sat back and watched them as they sought the everyday needs of mice and men: food, water and a place to live.

What has he found?

In the first place, he has discovered that mice develop different degrees of tolerance toward each other – depending on the genetic strain.

How Mice Get Social Leaders

IN SOME STRAINS," says Dr. Calhoun, "all members live happily without serious fights over food, water or lodging. Other strains obviously don't like each other. They fight all the time – usually for the privilege of being ahead of the other fellow. We have found that a mouse is often chased from his feeding by an intruder when there is plenty of room for both of them."

In "Mouse City" Dr. Calhoun built "stairways" leading to each of the four floors of his apartment houses. Weaker mice, he discovered, chased up the stairs to "top floor" apartments by their stronger or more aggressive brothers, lived in an inferior social world.

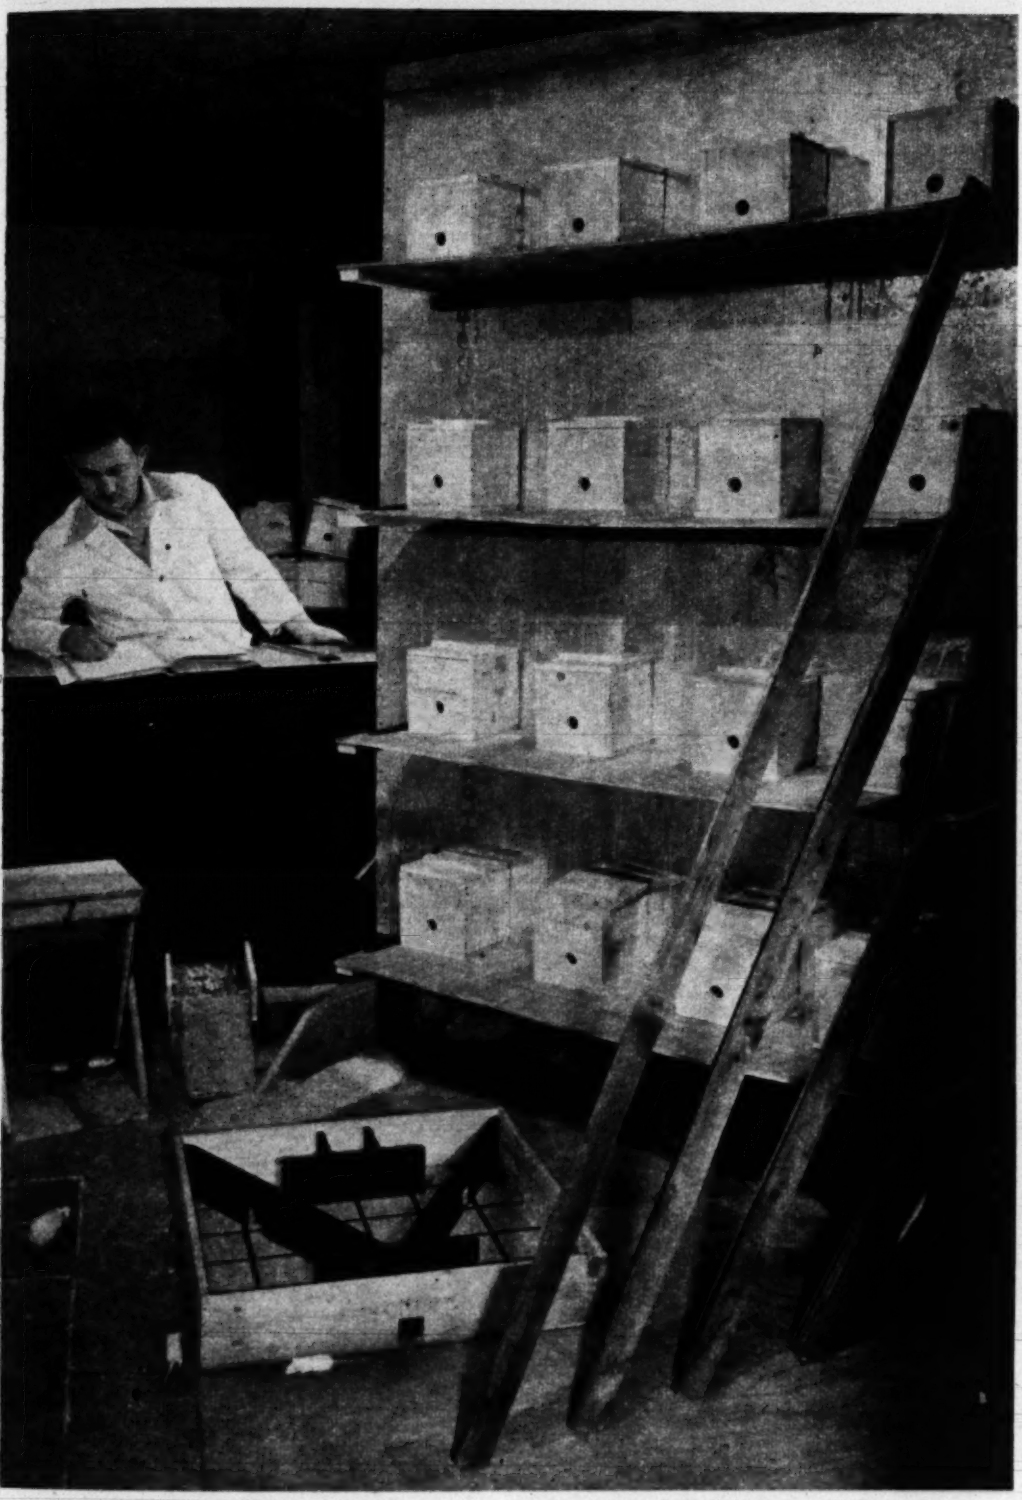
Those that occupied apartments near the source of food and water became "Mouse City's" social leaders.

"If this pattern proves to be the general rule," he says, "it will mean that mice of different social rank move through their environment in different ways."

In another experiment, Dr. Calhoun introduced a "problem box" to "Mouse City." The box has one entrance and eight exits.

He has found that "country" mice will use all these exits. But "apartment house" mice are accustomed to using one door in their flats. So, even in the problem box, they are inclined to go in and out the same entrance. Thus, "city mice," like humans, form "city habits."

Eventually, Dr. Calhoun hopes the experiments may help us predict and control the consequence of heredity and environment on the human level. He's making no promises – but we may see the day when mice will contribute greatly to the betterment of man!



APARTMENT HOUSE for mice is "Mouse City's" only skyscraper. It's located near City's food supply (left) and experimental problem box "playground" (center). At rear, Mouse City "mayor" Dr. John C. Calhoun charts mouse behavior patterns.

"STAIRWAYS" to apartments are used by mice in their trips to and from the City.

ONE-ROOM top-floor flat is occupied by lower middle-class mouse (see story).

Now...false teeth wearers eat corn, steak, apples!

Solve your loose-plate problem with a dentist's discovery that holds dentures tighter

AT LAST . . . .you can keep dentures in place, really tight—with the application of a new dental adhesive formulated expressly to keep dental plates in tighter, longer.

This new adhesive—developed by a dentist—is letting thousands of false teeth wearers eat apples, steak, corn on the cob—foods they had to "pass up" before because of their loose and slipping plates.

The secret is simple. This new adhesive contains an ingredient that literally impedes the penetration of moisture—exerts maximum resistance to the fluids (saliva, coffee, other liquids) that weaken and "break down" the action of adhesives and cause dentures to work loose.

This new adhesive, Staze, is a homogeneous gel of a viscous, binding gum. It has a binding, "clinching" action. That's why it "takes hold" almost instantly.

Easy, pleasant to use. Get a tube of Staze at any drugstore.

Its cost (low for hand-loomed, individually embroidered garments): from $10 to $15.

THIS CHRISTMAS you can buy: (1) cowboy pistols that smoke; (2) plastic mixers that make real milk shakes; (3) dolls whose nylon hair can be waved; (4) miniature Geiger counters that locate uranium! (Thus has realism entered the toy world!)

These are just a few of the realistic toys that shoppers will find in U.S. toy departments.

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST

Better Than Any Other Way of Preventing Tooth Decay According to Published Reports!

READER'S DIGEST RECENTLY REPORTED on one of the most extensive experiments in dentifrice history! And here are additional facts: The one and only toothpaste used in this research was Colgate Dental Cream. Yes, and two years' research showed that brushing teeth with Colgate's right after eating stopped tooth decay best! Better than any other home method of oral hygiene!

YES, THE COLGATE WAY STOPPED MORE DECAY for more people than ever reported in dentifrice history! There were no new cavities for more than 1 out of 3 who used Colgate's as directed. No dentifrice can stop all decay, or help cavities already started. But brushing teeth right after eating with Colgate Dental Cream is the most effective way yet known to help your dentist prevent decay!

THE COLGATE WAY STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST!

 YOU SHOULD KNOW! Colgate's, while not mentioned by name, was the one and only toothpaste used in the research reported in July Reader's Digest.

EGIL MAKES SURE HE HAS FOUND THE MAID WITH SEA-BLUE EYES AND HAIR OF FLAME.....
.....WITHOUT A WORD, HE SWINGS HER TO HIS SADDLE AND CLATTERS OFF AMID ANGRY SHOUTS.
